CHIROPRACTORS

Claim Irregularities in Spine Cause High Blood Pressure

Affecting no particular age, but more or less common in individuals of all ages, high blood pressure is one of the most frequent and one of the most dangerous indications in the physical conditions. It is so vitally important that wherever physical examinations are given for life insurance policies or other purposes, much depends on whether or not the examination shows a normal blood pressure. Chiropractic is the only means known whereby the blood pressure can be lowered in a normal, natural way.

NORMAL BLOOD PRESSURE

It must be understood that the blood pressure varies in different individuals and under different conditions. In a general way it may be said that the blood pressure varies with the age of the individual, increasing as the age increases. Therefore, a person thirty years of age should show a blood pressure of approximately 120, while a person fifty years of age should show a blood pressure of approximately 150. At the age of 70 the blood pressure should be approximately 170. Anything beyond the figure indicated by the age constitutes a high blood pressure, and is of vital importance in the health of the patient.

Kidney Involvement

We must understand that there are continually being taken into the body fluids in the form of drink and food and that these fluids are absorbed in the walls of the stomach and intestines, ultimately finding their way into the blood stream. With this continual addition of fluid in the blood stream, there must be a system whereby fluids are continually being eliminated, else the pressure would very shortly be increased past the limitations of the blood vessels. The system which takes fluid from the blood that it is held in a continually state of balance are the kidneys and the skin principally. We continually throw off perspiration from the skin which indirectly comes from the blood stream. We also continually void urine which also comes indirectly from the blood stream. If the kidneys fail to function properly, as they do in many forms of kidney disorder, a double burden is thrown upon the skin, and if it is unable to carry this burden the result is an increased blood pressure.

The Heart in High Blood Pressure

The heart should normally send out a certain definite amount of blood in each minute. If it becomes too active and contracts too often the amount of blood is increased in quantity and the pressure is consequently increased in the blood vessels. If, through some disturbance in the nervous mechanism, the heart contracts too forcibly, the same result occurs. Thus an abnormal heart action is very often the cause of high blood pressure.

Results of High Blood Pressure

There is usually a shortness of breath, dizziness when the patient suddenly changes posture, ringing or ringing in the ears, difficulty in concentration of mind, and very often symptoms which affect the heart. The heart symptoms may vary from a mere consciousness of the heart action to an intense pain in the heart, or even heart failure. Sometimes, too, there may be a grave tendency to disease of the lungs or congestion in the eyes. Possibly swelling of the ankles or pain over the kidneys may also exist.

Why the Spine.

Upon first thought it might seem absurd to contend that in the spine would be found the cause of high blood pressure. Upon second thought it is neither absurd nor unreasonable. On the other hand, it is the most logical conclusion to be reached. First it must be realized that every organ in the body is dependent upon the nervous system that it may function properly. One could not contract a muscle in the arm if all nerves leading to that arm were cut. Let these nerves be pressed upon and the function is hindered in proportion to the degree of pressure. So it is with the heart. If the nerves leading to the heart are pressed upon, the heart discloses an abnormal pressure. If the nerves leading to the kidney are pressed upon, this organ is abnormal in its function. So it is with the skin, with the brain, or any other organ.

To reverse our reasoning, any abnormality in the kidneys, in the brain, in the skin, in the heart, or in the blood vessels, is proof positive that these organs are not receiving their proper supply of nerve energy, and that an interference exists where the nerves leave the spine through small openings between adjacent segments (small bones), of which the spine is composed. When one of these segments is in an abnormal position, the chiropractor is able to detect it and his special training fits him to restore it to the normal so that free transmission of nerve energy through the nerve may prevail.

Experience

Experience has proved time and again in thousands upon thousands of cases that Chiropractic is able to adjust the cause of these conditions and restore blood pressure to normal. Perhaps you have tried many other systems and all may have failed. This is no criterion on the ability of your chiropractor to relieve your trouble. Chiropractic is a science founded on an entirely different basis than any other health system. It has advanced with such rapid strides that today it is the foremost non-therapeutic method in existence. There is, certainly, no condition with which chiropractors are more universally successful than that of high blood pressure, and this is true, because they get down to the very fundamental cause of such abnormal conditions.
