Ashland's Water Supply

Reeder Gulch reservoir lacks less than two feet of being full, and this in spite of the fact that for nearly two months the power plant in the canyon has been operating at capacity with water from the reservoir, according to City Water Superintendent Earl Hoeler. With not more than five feet of snow on Mt. Ashland at the present time, which will mean the saving of every drop of water during the dry summer months, the reservoir will be of great value to Ashland next summer, Hoeler declared. The average depth of snow on the mountain at this time of the year is from 10 to 15 feet—the present snow depth is only a third of the maximum. Hoeler pointed out.—Ashland Tidings.

New Caps for O. N. G.

New style Pershing caps have been requisitioned for each enlisted man in the Oregon National Guard, and it is hoped that they will be available for issue before 1930 camp. Now if we can get the promise of new style leggings to go with the new uniforms, caps and belts, the guard will take its proper place, sartorially speaking.—The Oregon Guardsman.

Mabel Normand, Elfin Film Comedienne, Takes Final Cue As She Did First—Smiling

By HUBBARD KEAVEY (Associated Press Staff Writer)

MONROVIA, Cal., Feb. 24 (AP)—Mabel Normand is dead. The Elfin film comedienne, who took her final cue from the Great Director early yesterday morning, went into the fadeout as she entered the prologue—smiling.

Her private secretary and closest friend, Mrs. Julia Benson, who was with her until the last, told how the girl who has made millions laugh faced the end of the picture a few hours before dawn:

"A few minutes before the end came," Mrs. Benson said, "Mabel reached over, took her hand in my own and asked me to pray with her. I did as she requested and as I leaned over and whispered into her ear, she smiled and closed her eyes as if to go to sleep.

A moment later the end came, so peaceful and quiet that neither the nurse nor I realized that the little darling was gone. Not even a word of farewell—only a smile."

End Not Unexpected

The passing of Miss Normand, whose colorful 26 years were as full of tragedy and unhappiness as her pictures were full of gaiety and laughter, was not wholly unexpected. She became ill in December, 1928, with an ailment which developed into tuberculosis. In March last year she was removed to a sanitarium here. Blood transfusions recently gave her temporary strength, but soon thereafter she began to sink.

Miss Normand's husband, Lew Cody, to whom she was married in November, 1926, was told of her death by Norman Kerry at the conclusion of a birthday party in Cody's honor at the Kerry home.

Funeral arrangements tentatively have been set for Friday morning at the Church of the Good Shepherd, with burial in Calvary cemetery.

Taylor Murder Cast Shadow

A murder, a shooting and an alienation of affections suit brought the first shadows into Miss Normand's life.

The murder of 1923, disclosed the father of William Desmond Taylor, a prominent Hollywood director and the shadow of the event cast itself permanently over the life of Mabel Normand as the curve of her success and stardom veered sharply downward.

She had called at Taylor's home to borrow a book. A few hours later Taylor's body was found. Miss Normand was the last person to see him alive. It is yet to be learned who killed Taylor.

The second affair was the shooting of Cortland S. Dines, a young Denver millionaire, in 1922. Mabel and he were at a party at Edna Purviance's home and Mabel's chauffeur came there on an errand. While there the chauffeur shot Dines. The motive was never satisfactorily explained, although the driver was acquitted.

Figured in Divorce About a year later Miss Normand was brought into the divorce complaint of Georgia W. Church against Norman W. Church. Miss Normand retailed with a complaint charging libel, and asked half a million dollars damages. The divorce complaint later was withdrawn.

This series of unfortunate events so hurt and humiliated Miss Normand that she lost much of her nerve and sparkle. Still Hollywood's great and near-great gathered at her home, as always, to listen to her wit and laughter.

Normand was born in Boston, November 10, 1894, and her family moved to Staten Island when she was quite young. She was the tomboy of the neighborhood and played more with boys at their games than with the girls and their dolls. One of her youthful playmates was Louis Costello, now Lew Cody, also a former screen star, to whom she was married by a justice of the peace at 3 o'clock one morning after a gay party.

Miss Normand at 14 posed for artists and modeled clothes. In 1910 she started in motion pictures in a bathing suit at the Vitaphone studio in New York. She had a small role as a diving girl.

Started Under Griffith Regular employment for a time came at the Biograph studio where an actor named David Wark Griffith had just won his directorial spurs.

Just starting then, took a little girl named Mary Pickford, a strong man named Michael Sinner, who preferred the name of Mack Sennett, Blanche Sweet and the Gishes, Lillian and Dorothy.

Mabel, a comedienne at heart, had few roles because Griffith preferred serious pictures. When there was a comedy bit Mabel got it. Otherwise she was a lady with a dark past.

Entered Comedy Mabel's great opportunity came when the Griffith company moved to Los Angeles. Sennett by this time had become a director and he discovered Mabel's innate comedy talents and assisted her in developing them. She was in scores of comedies and the villains who pursued her were in turn pursued by the famous Keystone cops.

Her gayety, her laughter and her tomboyishness made Mabel the queen of the lot that included such talent as Gloria Swanson, Charlie Chaplin, Roscoe Arbuckle, Louise Fazenda, Marie Prevost, Wallace Beery, Raymon Griffith and Ben Turpin.

Mabel, with Arbuckle and Chaplin, played in one of the first feature length comedies, "Tillie's Pandemonium," which starred Marie Dressler and was one of the truly great comedy hits.

"Mickey," made in 1915, considered by many to be Miss Normand's best picture, followed. The villain in it was her childhood pal, Louis Costello. The picture was such a success that another company obtained her services for a reputed $3,500 a week, the largest salary paid in pictures up to that time. The few pictures she made under that contract were not wholly successful and she retired for nearly a year.

In 1921 she returned to the screen in "Molly-O," which demonstrated that the star, in spite of her absence, had lost none of her popularity. She became critically ill in 1922, but came back to repeat her success in "Suzanna" and "The Extra Girl."

About four years ago she tried a comeback, but the few pictures she made were not money-makers. She then retired to her Beverly Hills home.

Efficacy of Spinal Adjustment for HEADACHES

There are many thousands of people who have suffered because of headaches, some of them for many years, and during that time have been continually treating the effects in one way or another, rather than getting to the fundamental basis of what is causing their headaches.

This is accounted for largely by the fact that the average individual seeks to rid himself of pain the quickest way, even though the method employed may not be of ultimate benefit to his health. He seeks rather to eliminate the cause of his headache, rather than to determine its causative factor and strive to make an abnormal condition again normal.

Headache is a term used to express pain in different parts of the head or perhaps one who affects the entire structure.

HEADACHES which are due to abnormalities
