STATE PRISON TO HOLD OPEN HOUSE 24-25

Administration Building To Be Thrown Open For Inspection

SALEM, Ore., May 21, (AP)—Superintendent Henry W. Meyers and other officials of the state penitentiary will be hosts to the people of Oregon next Saturday and Sunday when open house is to be held in the new prison administration building that is now practically complete. The building, a four-story structure, will be occupied early next week.

Located in the new building will be the administrative and industrial offices, guards' quarters, prison arsenal, matron's office, and, on the top floor, quarters for 50 female prisoners.

Women Polish Quarters—Under the direction of the matron, Mrs. Gene Halley, and her assistant, Mrs. Bertha Mathews, a number of women prisoners are engaged in polishing up the women's quarters. Rugs have been bought for the corridor, and these were being dusted and put in place yesterday. The new quarters, with baths and other modern conveniences in every room, and with good beds, are better furnished than many hotels and in color, cleanliness and convenience far ahead of anything many of the women have known "outside."

Corrective Needs Provided—Corrective needs have not been overlooked, and one room has been set apart especially for the girls who won't be good. Segregation as a precaution against infectious diseases, never before possible among the women in the Oregon penitentiary, is provided in the new quarters.

The new building is considered fireproof. With the exception of windows and doors it is entirely the product of prison labor. This includes plumbing, interior decoration and various artistic features, for example an electric color fountain on the first floor.

The public will be received next Saturday and Sunday between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 4 p. m.

The excavation has been completed for the new cell wing recently authorized by the state emergency board.

"FRESH FROM THE ROASTER" FLAVOR IN EVERY CAN

TEETH SUFFER WHEN THE DIET LACKS VITAMINS

Menus Should Be Planned to Include Vitamins, Minerals and Roughage

Dental authorities say that a child must have a balanced diet to insure proper development of the teeth. Furthermore, such a diet must be continued in adult life to maintain tooth structures already developed.

Vitamins "C" and "D" play an important part in promoting the health of teeth. Many familiar foods contain one of these vitamins. They are tomatoes, peas, leafy vegetables, yellow turnips; oranges, apples, raspberries, peaches; egg yolks, butter and whole milk.

The taste-appeal of many of these foods can be increased by the use of sugar. Put a dash of sugar to a pinch of salt in the vegetables as they cook. Sprinkle sugar on the fresh fruits or add it when stewing them. And of course, puddings made of eggs and milk need sugar for palatability.

In meal planning, Jellies and jams should be included frequently. They are delicious accompaniments for meat as well as for bread. Their fruit content is also healthful. Good food promotes good health and teeth. The Sugar Institute.
