Passing of George S. Long Takes From Ranks of Large Lumber Operators One Whose Life Was Identified With Pine Industry

How Boys in Portland Are Wriggling and Twisting and Throwing Their Stink Bombs

By BRUCE DENNIS

THE passing of George S. Long, which occurred in this city Saturday evening, takes from the ranks of the large lumber operators one more whose life was identified with the pine industry.

Mr. Long had reached a rather ripe age in years but in mentality he was one of the very keenest citizens of the nation.

As the directing force of the Weyerhaeuser Timber company he has been intimately connected with the great building operation of that concern in Klamath Falls and has watched its progress carefully.

MR. LONG looked upon his company's undertaking here as the outstanding one. He held that Klamath pine timber was of superior quality, that location of the plant was ideal and that nature had contributed many conditions to aid and assist the manufacturer as is humanly possible.

HOW the boys in Portland are wriggling and twisting and calling everyone who is supporting Mr. Meier harsh names. It is good for the old city on the Columbia river to become aroused.

Those opposed to Mr. Meier are lighting their torches and throwing their stink bombs at some of us who happen to believe Meier will make a good governor and do not hesitate to say so.

LET us say to these dear brothers that their brick bats injure nobody that their shots of wrath fall to hit the center, and that their love which we used to enjoy when we could be of service to them is as easily forgotten by us as it is by them.

This is a time in Oregon to elect our best men. It is a crisis, with wheat selling at 60 cents and lambs at a nickel; with taxes high and questionable values being received for the tax money. It is a time to put a man on the
