CHAPTER XLII

She smiled at him. "Do you think I have?"

And Sloan raised his eyes and looked at her thoughtfully. He said, "No, I don't."

Anne laughed, and she let her eyes drop to evade the look in his own. There was a bold searchlight in them that made her feel that her secrets would not be safe from them. She said, "How do you tell—or are you just guessing?"

Sloan chuckled and gave the waiter a bill. "It's something more than a guess. One of the requirements of a director is clairvoyance, you know. . . Shall we go?"

He gestured to the waiter, but he did not expect any change. When she was beside him, Anne, in the car, once more he continued where he had left off. "Was I right, Anne?"

"I'm afraid you were," she smiled. "What's to be done about it?"

"Something should be done about it—immediately," he added, seriously. "You're going to fall in love some day, Anne, and when you do you're going to be a better actress."

"Haven't I heard something like that before?"

"I wouldn't doubt it," he admitted. "Old truths are the truest ones, after all."

"But how do we know they are truths? Doesn't that sound like an extraordinary simple prescription for success—to fall in love?"

Sloan shook his head. He was driving through a darkened stretch and Anne could not see his face. "You're laughing at me," his voice came to her presently, "and I'm telling you something that's good for your soul. . . You're young, Anne, and you're untouched by life, and . . ."

He paused, and Anne wondered then if he was going to add something trite—something after the manner of fiction writers, about bringing out the woman in her in order to bring out the actress.

But he didn't. He said instead, "You're a great talent, Anne, but you don't use it all. You haven't learned yet to let yourself go."

there's something that—I don't know—there's something inside of you that you're keeping locked up. I said that when you fall in love you're going to be a better actress, and I mean it. I know it doesn't sound original, because there's an awful lot of guff printed about actresses having to live their parts in order to act them, and all that sort of thing. And of course any sensible person knows it isn't true."

Anne said humbly, "I'm sorry."

She said, "I don't understand, though, what you mean about locking something up inside of me."

Sloan pressed his foot on the brake pedal, and when the car stopped he turned and faced her. "Look at me," he said.

And Anne wondering why he had told her because she had become accustomed to obeying that authoritative ring in his voice. So she looked at him, and Sloan, with a little smile playing on his lips, continued to sit there and look at her.

"Well?"

Anne said quietly, coldly: "That was a cheap trick."

"Are you angry?"

She made no answer, and Sloan laughed softly. "There you are," he said, "you're angry, of course, but instead of being nice and primitive about it and slapping my face, you give me the high hat treatment. Anne," he declared, "you're too ladylike—you're too cold. God gave you emotion. Use it."

And then he apologized for kissing her. "Not that I didn't want to, though, he added with a grin. "It was a clinical experiment, but it was something more, too. If you showed me any encouragement at all, I'd fall for you pretty hard, Anne."

He drove her home then and advised her to get a good night's rest, and Anne obediently went straight to bed. She lay awake for a long time, though, thinking that Garry Sloan was a very

There are at least four mistakes in the above picture. They may pertain to grammar, history, etiquette, drawing or whatnot. See if you can find them. Then look at the scrambled word below, and unscramble it, by switching the letters around. Grade yourself 20 for each of the mistakes you find, and 20 for the word if you unscramble it. Look on this page and we'll explain the mistakes and tell you the word. Then you can see how near a hundred you bat.
