License Granted Famous Aviatix and George Palmer Putnam FRIENDS OF TWO ARE REPORTED MYSTIFIED Miss Earhart Was First Woman To Fly Over the Atlantic

NEW YORK, Nov. 10. (AP)—Miss Amelia Earhart, first woman to fly the Atlantic, and vice-president of the New York, Philadelphia and Washington Airway corporation, and George Palmer Putnam, publisher and explorer, have obtained a license to wed but whether the ceremony has been performed was a mystery to their friends today.

Henry P. Bailey, town clerk of Noank, Conn., and probate judge Arthur P. Anderson concurred in statements a license had been issued and Judge Anderson said he had waived the five-day notice of intention required by Connecticut law. Bailey said the license was issued Saturday.

Denies Wedding Miss Earhart, in Washington today on business, denied she and Putnam were married. She and Putnam were at the summer home of Mrs. Frances Palmer, the publisher's mother, at Noank, Saturday. She said Putnam had not accompanied her to Washington nor could he be located at his apartment in Sutton Place, New York.

May Marry, Sometime She said she went to Noank quite frequently but insisted she knew nothing of a marriage license being issued there Saturday to her and Putnam.

Putnam Divorced in 1929 Miss Earhart became interested in aviation and learned to fly while doing social work in Boston. She was the first woman to obtain a pilot's certificate from the National Aeronautics association and at one time held the women's altitude record for a flight of 14,900 feet.

Putnam's previous marriage to Mrs. Dorothy Binney Putnam was ended by divorce in Reno, Nev., in December, 1929.

Call For Special Session Imminent

(Continued from Page One) tangible acts was deducted from the state property levy. Discuss Intangibles. When the intangibles tax was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court close to a million dollars which had been collected under it was deducted from the revenues under last year's total levy reducing the base upon which the commission must calculate its new levy by that amount. This situation can only be avoided, Governor Norblad contends, by calling the legislature into special session to re-enact the intangibles act in constitutional form and permit the state to retain the taxes which have already been collected under it.

The governor maintains the position that the intangibles act cannot be reenacted by the regular 1931 legislature and be made legally retroactive to cover the present calendar year and that only by legislative enactment during 1930 can the million dollars collected under it be retained.

Face Increased Deficit. Governor Norblad's further contention is that if the state loses the million dollars in intangibles taxes the legal amount it can collect from all tax sources for 1931 will be a million dollars less than was levied for this year and that the state deficit will be increased by $2,000,000, one million through loss of the intangibles collections and another million in enforced reduction of the levy for 1931.

G. O. P. Must Cooperate Says Senator Watson

(Continued from Page One) to support disturbing legislation. It is obviously the duty of the republican members to co-operate. Because of the futility of attempting immediately to solve the question of control in the next congress in view of the close balance of republican and democratic forces, the leaders are concentrating now on lining up their program for the approaching short session of the old congress.

It will open three weeks from today for a bare three months in which much must be accomplished. President Hoover has announced he will seek emergency appropriations for both unemployment and drought relief. The first is to be cared for by releasing funds for federal construction, which normally would not become available until much later. The second is to be a seed loan proposal for aiding farmers deprived by the drought devastation. The administration is anxious to have enacted.

The approaching session will see some changes in membership as a result of the election for vacancies were filled and gubernatorial appointees to fill out unexpired terms were replaced by the electorate. Both in the senate and the house these favor slightly the democratic party, but not sufficiently to seriously affect the balance at present existing.

The major changes of the election will not be felt until about one year hence. In spite of the oscillatory attitude expressed by the leaders of both parties, there was no assurance that all of the rank and file would seek to avoid trouble. There has been no open revolt against the democratic statement, which was signed by three of the party's presidential candidates, two executives of the national committee, and the two leaders in congress, but signs have appeared that some members were none too pleased.

Senator Watson, in accepting the democratic statement did not overlook entirely the administration criticism which it contained. "I could, of course," he said, "indulge in criticism at the obvious political propaganda which accompanies their public assurance, and I could reprimand as to the past, but this is not the spirit in which I desire to accept their offer of co-operation." "It (the election) represents a legislative victory for neither the democrats nor the republicans. It may well be said on one side that the democrats have made considerable legislative gains. It may be said on the other hand the number of gains of the opposing party are much less than in many mid-term elections hitherto; that the democrats have failed in their objective and that the republicans have held astonishingly well in the face of the adverse factors temporarily in motion."

"He that as it may," he concluded, "we are faced with a national situation where the only patriotic solution lies in co-operative action and I welcome it, and I am sure my colleagues welcome it also."
