Clearing Up the Greatest Mystery of the Century!

DISCOVERY OF FROZEN BODIES OF MAJOR ANDREE AND COMPANIONS IN ARCTIC 33 YEARS AFTER THEY VANISHED IN BALLOON BOUND FOR POLE WRITES SEQUEL TO DARING EXPLOIT OF 1897

By BRUCE CATTON
NEA Service Writer
Discovery of the bodies of three men in a long-desolate camp on remote Franz Josef Land, far inside the Arctic circle, brings to an end one of the most fascinating mysteries that ever puzzled the world—a mystery that began July 11, 1897, when Captain Salomon Auguste Andree and two companions sailed off for the top of the globe in a free balloon.

Andree and his companions were never heard of again. Now their bodies have been found in the Arctic waste, and Andree's diary—now being taken back to Sweden—will probably tell the complete story of their flight and its tragic culmination.

Until that diary is published there will still be gaps in the story; gaps to be filled in by ready imaginations. Meanwhile, the background of the flight, its brave beginning and a rough outline of the course taken by the drifting balloon are well known. They constitute one of the most amazing adventure stories of all history.

Salomon Auguste Andree was an explorer, an aviator and a scientist. Born at Grenna, Sweden, in 1854, the son of a chemist, he had a good education, specializing in mechanical and civil engineering. He became chief engineer of the Swedish patent office and professor at the Stockholm Technical School. In 1893 he made his first balloon ascension.

The possibility of exploring the Arctic by air fascinated him. In 1895 he submitted to the Academy of Sciences a plan for drifting across the North Pole by balloon, estimating that the job could be done for about $50,000.

Although he was ridiculed as a daredevil crank, his idea caught the public fancy, and the money was soon subscribed. The king of Sweden contributed $5,000, and Alfred Nobel, famed contributor of the Nobel prizes, gave $15,000.

Throughout 1895 and 1896 Andree worked on his balloon. Completing it, he sailed for Spitzbergen in the spring of 1896, taking with him a party of workmen and scientists and establishing a base on Dansk Island. A plan to generate hydrogen gas was built. Then he engaged two men to make the trip with him—Knut Frankel and Nils Strindberg, selected from a long list of volunteers—and waited for a favorable wind.

Andree had observed that through most of the summer the prevailing winds at Spitzbergen blew directly north. These winds, he was convinced, would carry a balloon not only to the North Pole but beyond it, across the unknown wastes to some point in Alaska near the Bering Strait. The distance was about 2,000 miles. Andree's observations had persuaded him that it could be traversed in six days. It was a tremendous gamble. The balloon had no motive power whatever. The winds might be fickle. But Andree felt sure that his balloon could stay in the air at least a month and probably much longer.

But the winds were adverse, and the take-off was finally postponed for a year. In the spring of 1897, therefore, Andree and his party returned to Dansk Island and made ready to begin their journey.

The balloon was the "last word" in the aeronautical language of that day. It must be remembered that aviation, at that time, was hardly even in its infancy. No airplane had ever flown. Count Zeppelin was just launched on his dirigible experiments. To go up in a balloon was to trust oneself to the elements to an infinitely greater extent than in the case today.

This striking sketch, drawn by Staff Artist Joe King from an old photograph, shows the start of the ill-fated balloon expedition of Major Andree and his two daring companions in 1897. Observe the peculiar construction of the double basket and the sail, with which it was planned to direct the balloon's course. Above is a sketch of Andree; below, his two companions, Knut Frankel, left, and Nils Strindberg.

er basket. This basket was decked over, with a railing about the deck and equipment on the deck for navigator and observer. Inside were three bunks. One of the party was to sleep while the other two were on duty on the upper deck.

Andree took along 32 carrier pigeons to substitute for the then undreamed-of radio, and 13 buoys which were to be dropped to the sea from time to time. Aboard were provisions for four months—chocolate, pemmican, preserved meats and vegetables and fruits, and lemon juice to prevent scurvy.

Andree knew that the balloon might land in uninhabited country, so he prepared for an extended trip on foot. Snowshoes were carried, and two sledges, and firearms with which the explorers could kill game.

To be sure, there was always the chance that the balloon would be forced down in the open sea; and when a friend asked Andree what they would do in that case, Andree remarked quietly, "Then we shall drown."

Finally, on Sunday, July 11, 1897, Andree found weather conditions favorable. Last messages were sent. Strindberg, a 24-year-old university professor, was to have been married before the trip began, but at the last moment he and his fiancée had decided to postpone the wedding until Strindberg returned; so Strindberg had a last letter and a last telegram to send.

The three explorers got in the basket. Andree told a friend, "Don't be uneasy if you do not hear from us for a year, or possibly for two years." The ropes mooring the balloon were cut, and the great bag sailed aloft. A sudden gust of wind carried it out over the bay and nearly dashed it down into the water, but ballast was hastily thrown out and the balloon shot upward, and sailing off to the north on a fresh breeze. A unique sail device, by which Andree hoped to be able to steer his craft, was brought into play.

and the balloon vanished to the northward. Days passed, and nothing was heard. In September it was learned that a carrier pigeon had landed on a ship near Spitzbergen some time before. This pigeon bore this message, signed by Andree:

"July 13, 12:30 p. m., 82.2 degrees north latitude, 15.5 degrees east longitude. Good progress toward the north. All goes well on board. This message is the third by carrier pigeon."

CARNIVAL HELD IN BONANZA ON FRIDAY EVENING

MRS. RUECK
BONANZA, Ore., Nov. 17, (Special)—A carnival was given Friday evening in the gymnasium by the high school and the grade school. A minstrel show, which was the big feature of the evening's entertainment, was especially good. Side shows and booths were additional attractions. The affair was most successful, both in its entertainment and in the large crowd that attended.

The Kiwanis club entertainment which was planned for November, has been postponed indefinitely. The community extends its sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Ray Kluge for the loss of their infant twin sons, John and James. Funeral services were held at the graveside Thursday afternoon with Rev. Harbord of Bonanza officiating.

Arthur Langell and Fred Rueck attended the banquet and annual meeting of the Southern Livestock association Saturday evening. Mr. Langell is inspector of brands for Klamath county.

Mrs. Monroe Lytle returned on Friday to Ashland, where she will continue her work of nursing. Mrs. Ada Parsons was in Klamath Falls on business on Wednesday.

H. S. Bray was ill with a bad cold last week. Harry Nichols returned from the hospital in Klamath Falls this week, and is now recuperating from an attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. Lucille Thurston was called to her home at Jefferson by the illness of her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rueck and Mrs. Mary Scott returned to Klamath Falls Friday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Orin Campbell were in the Bonanza community hall Sunday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bergdorf and Mr. and Mrs. Spencer were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dixon at dinner on Sunday.

Jack Hunt of the Western Cattlemen's Association, and Charles Drew were in the Bonanza community this week buying cattle.

Mrs. Margaret Holliday with her small son and daughter spent the week end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rueck.

J. L. Sparrenton and Mr. McGuire were in Klamath Falls on business last Friday.

John Ross was elected on the Horroff Irrigation board at an election held Wednesday.

Dan Driscoll was in Bonanza.

Twenty Youthful Singers Will Be Heard Over Radio

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 17, (AP)—Twenty youthful singers will be guests of San Francisco tonight.

The singers—ten boys and ten girls from nine western states—will compete in the fifth annual district audition of the Alwater Kent foundation following their reception here tonight. One boy and one girl will be chosen to represent the nine states in the National contest in New York December 15.

The audition starts at 10 p. m., being broadcast over the NBC Pacific Coast network from KPO. Nine judges, one from each state, and a special jury at large will select the district winners. The judges' votes will count 60 per cent and the votes of the radio audience 40 per cent.

For Hard Coughs That Call For Super-Help

Creomulsion is made for coughs from colds that hang on. For coughs deep and difficult—coughs where you dare not risk a less effective help. But careful people use it for coughs which were milder—use it to do the utmost and be safe. For nobody knows where a cough may lead. Creomulsion combines seven major helps in one. Some coughs yield best to one help, some to another. Doctors often differ on the best help, for coughs are not alike. So here we combine all the best—to be sure, Creomulsion stands first. Here it is tested, established and made palatable. For soothing membranes and combating germs, it is considered the supreme help in this type of cough. But other helps are sometimes needed—pine tar, wild cherry, menthol, ipecac and others. Nobody can tell to which help your cough will respond best. So experts have combined in Creomulsion all best helps in one. No narcotic, nothing harmful to a child, but a seven-way help to deal with all conditions. The price is $1.25—a little higher than a lesser help. But your druggist guarantees it. Your money is returned if it fails to bring the quick, complete help you desire. Don't you think it worth that little extra to be sure that you are doing the utmost for a cough?

Murder At Bridge

by ANNE AUSTIN
THE AVENGING PARROT
"MURDER BACKSTAIRS"

A clever author . . . a clever murdered . . . a clever detective—these ingredients have been mixed into one of the most fascinating mystery novels ever written. It is called "Murder at Bridge."

Two perfect crimes—if it had not been for the fact that an engaging young detective, Bonnie Dundee, was on the job—form the background for this story. With diabolical cunning, the criminal struck down his victims while they played bridge.

The author is Anne Austin, who wrote "The Black Pigeon" and gave the public a new type of sleuth in "The Avenging Parrot" and "Murder Backstairs." Be sure to read the new serial, beginning—
