SCHEDULE OF RATES FILED FOR KLAMATH

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 11, (AP)—The Natural Gas Corporation of Oregon, which holds franchises in 25 Oregon cities and which is to start service immediately in La Grande, Bend, Coquille, Cottage Grove and Klamath Falls, filed its schedule of service rates today with the public service commission.

The rates are effective December 15. The company is the first natural gas concern to operate in Oregon. It operates also in California and Washington.

Rates to be effective in the five Oregon cities follow:

La Grande—First 750 cubic feet or less per month, $1.50; next 2250 cubic feet, 20 cents per 100 cubic feet; next 4000 feet, 15 cents per 100; all over 7000 feet, 10 cents per 100.

Bend, Coquille and Cottage Grove—First 200 feet per month, $1.50; next 3700 feet, 17.5 cents per 100; next 4000 feet, 12.5 cents per 100; all over 8000 feet, 10 cents per 100.

Klamath Falls—First 200 feet per month, $1.50; next 1700 feet, 17.5 cents per 100; next 1000 feet, 12.5 cents per 100; all over [illegible] cents per 100.

The permission to operate was granted the gas company by the public service commission in Portland yesterday.

STATE RESTS NACKER CASE; DEFENSE BEGUN

own testimony to the jury.

Gillenwaters testified that the confession was secured from the defendant in the county jail, in quarters at present occupied by the defendant, and that said confession was the same statement given by Nacker to officers the previous night on the way to the city, reduced to writing.

No Duress Used

Gillenwaters stated that the statement was written by himself, read to the defendant and revised at the defendants request. Nacker swore that the statement was the truth, and Gillenwaters, as a notary public of the state of Oregon, acknowledged the document with Nacker's signature to Jailer Rae, and R. L. Leonard, a trusty in the jail, as witnesses.

The statement was admitted as evidence over the objections of counsel and read to the jury. It embodied only the same old story of chasing a hawk, and loss of memory until Nacker found himself tying the girl. He stated that he had seen neither the man or the girl before.

Articles Identified

Ross Brow[illegible] county sheriff, was called to the stand to identify clothing worn by Nacker, and Sheriff Low was recalled to identify the bullet found in the blood stain on the beach of Summit Lake, the site of the homicide.

Hans Zimmerman, who resides at Crescent Lake was called by state, and testified that he saw Nacker at Crescent Lake station on the night of September 1, and that Nacker asked him where Judge Duncan and Harry Boivin could be found. Zimmerman told the youth that he thought the Judge was at Odell Lake.

Nacker's Father Testifies

First witness for defense to take the stand, was J. F. Nacker, father of the defendant. Nacker, unlike his son who is small and wirey, is a large, powerfully built man, of florid complexion. He testified that he married the boy's mother, the present Mrs. Brock, in November 1907, at Vancouver, Washington. Donald was born two years after the marriage. Nacker stated that the baby was sick a good deal, but that he didn't pay much attention to him, thinking it was only stomach trouble.

Subject to Fits

The child was only six years old when Mr. and Mrs. Nacker separated, but even before that time, Nacker stated, the child had had strange fits. The defendant spent some time with his father when he was about 14 years of age, and at that time, he had a queer attack in the night. Nacker said he heard the boy making a strange noise, and found him rigid in his bed, drenched with perspiration, and that when he relaxed, he was in a weakened condition remembering nothing of the seizure.

Nacker testified that his father, Frank Nacker, of Wayne county, Michigan, was subject to violent attacks when he threatened the lives of his wife and family, and that the man was finally committed to the Michigan State insane asylum. A fac simile of the document committing the man to the insane asylum was submitted by counsel for evidence.

Father Discussed

Jack Nacker, the boy's father, born with that physical deformity known as polydactylism, or extra fingers, has two thumbs on his right hand. The man testified that about three years before his marriage to the mother of the defendant, he contracted syphilis, and that he entered a hospital in Hot Springs, Arkansas, and believed himself cured. However, recent blood tests show that syphilitic infection remains in his system, the Wasserman test, applied by laboratory technicians showing a four plus count.

After a short cross examination of Nacker, counsel called Dr. C. V. Rugh to the stand to testify to the taking of Nacker's blood tests, and sending them to laboratories in Portland. L. H. Huntley, laboratory technician from Portland testified to the analyzing of Nacker's blood test, and results found.

A Mother's Devotion

Mrs. William Brock, mother of the defendant, then took the stand. Dressed in black, with soft lace at neck and wrists, Mrs. Brock was mother love personified, as with stifled sobs which racked her body, she told of the birth of the boy, her only child. How she has worried over him all his life, and devoted herself to him in the hopes that he might outgrow the strange seizures doctors diagnosed as epilepsy.

When the boy was six years old, his mother and father separated, because the mother disapproved of Nacker's drinking. After spending some time with a sister, Mrs. Brock, then Mrs. Nacker, took up a homestead at Crescent Lake. There she and her little boy lived alone, the mother devoting herself to the child, and almost the only support of the boy, as the father rarely sent money. Mrs. Nacker went to Bend, frequently and hired herself out as a seamstress.

Don a Nervous Child

Mrs. Brock told of taking the child to Portland, and having him examined by doctors to find out why he was so nervous, why he screamed out in the night, and was the victim of strange spells of rigidity. Doctors advised the mother to keep her son in the open, which she did, being his only companion on hikes, hunting trips and the like.

Mrs. Brock told of her son enlisting in the navy, but how, after his return from the navy in 1929, the bad spells increased. She related incidents of apparent rages on the part of Donald, when he jerked the dial from a radio, but had no recollection of the act afterward.

Learn of Tragedy

The mother stated that during these attacks the boy's eyes were fearfully dialated and that his face appeared drawn.

She finished her testimony with the return of herself and Mr. Brock from Medford on the night of September 2. On their way they had heard of the killing at Summit Lake. Upon entering their house, they found Donald asleep in bed. They woke the boy, and his mother asked him if he had heard that a man had been killed at Summit Lake.

Boy Admits Crime

Like a thunder bolt descending upon the mother's heart, came the answer of the boy. "Yes, mama, I guess I did it, she said I did it."

"Don, why did you do it?" cried William Brock, the kindly step father, who has cherished the boy as his own son ever since his marriage to the mother in 1918.

"I don't know why I did it dad, but I want to give myself up, and I want you to go with me dad."

Mother in Tears

So the father and mother went to Crescent station with the youthful slayer, and gave him up to the officers. At the memory, the mother broke down. State refused to cross examine, and Mrs. Brock, a picture of grief, left the stand to take her place by the son who had never changed contenance during her moving testimony.

William Brock, the step father was called to the stand, and corroborated testimony in regard to the boy's "spells", and court adjourned for the noon intermission before the finish of Brock's testimony.

Tells of Rope

William Brock, step-father of the boy, Don Nacker, continued his testimony after the noon recess today. Mr. Brock testified that Don had always had queer "spells" from the time he had first seen the child. Mr. Brock identified states exhibit of the rope that Don is alleged to have had with him at Summit Lake, as one at least similar to rope that Don took with him on all occasions to tie his dog to the car. Mr. Brock stated that the dog had been left at home on the Summit Lake trip because of the near approach of the birth of puppies.

Cross examination of Brock was carried on by T. R. Gillenwaters, but little further information was elicited except for characteristics of the spells, and tendencies to fight until the seizure ended. Other variations of the spells were staring fits, Mr. Brock said, when the defendant could not be roused except by loud calling.

Others Tell of Fits

Mrs. Gladys Halvorsen, her son, LeRoy Halvorsen, Harold Lemon, manager of the Southern Pacific hotel at Crescent Lake and Jack Helfridge, who had charge of the storage waters at Crescent Lake during the summer and early fall were all called by defense to testify to the strange actions on the part of the defendant. All stated that they had seen him staring at nothing for long periods of time, and young Halvorsen stated that he had seen Don Nacker go into a fit of some kind and beat his dog unmercifully, but that the boy later had no recollection of whipping the beast, of which he was very fond.

Solemnity Broken

The solemnity of the court room scene was relieved when Fred Duke, local taxi driver was called to the witness stand. Duke was most unwilling to testify, waiting several minutes before coming before the clerk to be sworn in. When seated on the stand he remonstrated with the Judge, saying that he had come only to listen, that he didn't want to testify. Judge Skipworth told him that it was necessary for him to answer questions since he had been called, after which Mr. Duke was so overcome, either by the moving character of his testimony, or his extreme reluctance to testify, that he burst into tears, and it was some time before he could calm himself enough to talk. He finally stated that at one time when he was driving stage at Crescent Lake, he came upon Don Nacker standing in the middle of the road with a gun. The boy seemed to be lost, and Duke took him into the car to drive him to the Brock home. Enroute, the boy thought he was being taken in the wrong direction, and fought for possession of the wheel. As soon as he recognized landmarks, however, Duke said, he became himself again, and had apparently forgotten the incident.

The trial gives promise of lasting at least until Saturday night, judging from the progress that was made today.

Ballistic Expert Testifies

R. H. Craddock, ballistics expert of Portland, took the stand for the prosecution early Wednesday afternoon. Craddick testified that the bullets and empty shells found at the scene of the homicide were fired from the gun which Doris Bacon identified as the rifle Nacker was carrying when he shot Dunbar.

When the court adjourned at 5 o'clock, a legal battle was in progress over an asserted written confession alleged by the state to have been given by Nacker freely and voluntarily, without duress or promise. Jailer Ed Rae, when placed upon the stand, testified that he had witnessed the confession, as did a trusty in the jail named R. L. Leonard.

Upon cross examination Ralph Horan, counsel, elicited the information that T. R. Gillenwaters was the only person in Nacker's cell at the time the confession was written, and that Rea and Leonard witnessed only the signature of Nacker.

Doris Bacon Recalled

During Wednesday afternoon's session Dorris Bacon was recalled to the stand to identify clothing worn by herself on the day of the shooting, as well as overalls, boots and shirt worn by Nacker, and the rifle that brought death to her companion.

Richard O'Brien, forest ranger at Crescent Lake, testified to issuing fire permits to Nacker for August 31 at Summit lake and September 1 and 2 at Burnt Wagon camp on the trail to Diamond Peake. O'Brien was also present when Dunbar's body was found in the brush.

The man who first called it "easy money" must be the same fellow who invented "easy payments."

PLAN CHANGE IN OREGON'S GAME LAWS

ing does off the bag list after four or five years.

PORTLAND, Dec. 11, (AP)—Under the re-codified game laws to be presented to the legislature in January, a trout is a trout whether it be three inches long or ten inches. As such it will count in the bag limit of 20 fish.

Heretofore the small fish were tossed back into the stream where practically all died. An angler who handles a fish before he returns it to the water is subject to a fine of $25—the maximum is $500.

Under terms of the new draft the bear will be officially declared game. An open season with no bag limit will be held during October and November.

The new code forbids use of silencers on rifles.

GETS AWAY WITH CAB AND CASH

Officers were immediately notified. Another car was ordered to return Brotherton to the city, and arrived here shortly after midnight.

The cab driver reports the robber as an entire stranger to him, and describes him as being fairly well dressed, weighing about 140 pounds, with a distinctive scar on his chin.

Local officers have notified other cities, and are confident of recovering the car at an early date, if not the thief.

RENOWNED SCIENTIST OUR GUEST

here?' and the answer always is, 'Yes.' That is the question and answer now."

Evidences Complex

He evidenced his "relativity complex," however, a few minutes later when he drew a German friend aside from the phalanx of cameramen and whispered, "I do not see them. I feel like I am on top of a high mountain, and I do not look down."

"I am going straightway to Pasadena at the request of the university (the California Institute of Technology) there. The main purpose of my voyage is to allow me to take a direct part in the scientific life of an American university and to be able to discuss matters pertaining to my own branch of science with my colleagues, in a more immediate, personal way than would be possible by correspondence. Perhaps I will also give a few lectures.

Americans Praised

"The Americans of the present time have not only contributed vastly to every form of scientific investigation all over the world, but they also are giving their most serious attention to co-operation, in a peaceful and friendly way. And I, for one, shall be very happy to set foot once more on the shores of the great republic which in the days since the end of the unfortunate world war has become the chief protagonist for every form of scientific and technical progress.

"America has already given us that perfection of methods of production with which we are all of us becoming increasingly familiar, and now we have reached the point where we dare hope it will find ways and means to overcome the existing economic crisis, and furthermore, that American genius may be able to devise a definite formula which will allow this world to establish a more lasting and satisfactory balance between manufacturer and consumer than any that has existed so far.

"For this last problem, as I see it, is the most important practical issue that faces the people of the year 1930."

Red Cross Quota Is Obtained By Klamath County

A statement issued this morning by George H. Walton, secretary of the Klamath county Red Cross, gives the Red Cross membership in the county as 1086. With reports yet to come in from Merrill, Malin, Pelican Bay, Werhaeuser and several other small districts, it is evident that this year's drive will go over the quota, Mr. Walton stated.

Last year the membership reached 1200. The quota for this year is 1500.

No comment was forthcoming from any of the officials who arrived on the special train, all of them declining to be interviewed relative to further plans in connection with the application of the Great Northern for permission of the I.
