REPORT REBEL
LEADER SLAIN
IN STRONGHOLD

THIRWADDY, Burma, Jan. 2. (AP)—The mysterious "man who would be king," who directed the recent series of savage raids on Burmese jungle villages, is believed to have been killed by government troops, which returned here today after sacking the rebel stronghold and burning an almost impenetrable jungle.

The soldiers told of hacking their way at dusk through an almost impassable jungle to a hidden palace. This they captured after a stiff engagement, in which thirty of the blue pajama-clad rebels were killed and one British soldier was slightly wounded.

In the palace was the body of a tall, muscular fair-complexioned Burman, on the head a royal turban. An examination revealed that he had wanted away with fever. He apparently had been directing the rebel troops to the last, despite severe sickness.

In other rooms of the palace were found cartridges, dynamite and gasoline. These the British confiscated, then fired the structure. They returned through the jungle without discovering the identity of the sinister figure whose generalship of the savage warriors created a reign of terror in scores of jungle villages.

Scattered remnants of the rebel forces still are being pursued.
