

COPECO REPORT FOR QUARTER IS RELEASED

The completion of the new Grants Pass substation, the building of the new regulating dam at Keno on the Klamath river and other important Copco construction items are covered in the quarterly letter to shareholders recently released by the California-Oregon Power company. The report with which was enclosed the regular quarterly dividend on Copco stock indicates that considerable construction activity has been engaged in by the local utility during the past three months period with more to follow as soon as approved. Much progress has been noted, particularly in the construction of rural lines to serve additional houses and farms in the rural sections of Southern Oregon and Northern California.

The following paragraphs are quoted from the Copco report:

Construction
The Grants Pass substation which was started November 1 has just been completed and placed in actual operation. This new and modern addition to the company's properties occupies a desirable location just outside the city limits and adjacent to the C. and O. C. railroad. The completion of this new substation will permit the improvement of present voltage conditions on line 7, which extends from the Gold Bay generating station to Grants Pass, through an increase in capacity from 24,000 to 66,000 volts.

It is also expected that betterment of service conditions on the Glendale and Wilder lines will result from the addition of automatic reclosing oil circuit-breakers in the new station. The completion of the Grants Pass substation assures ample capacity and dependable service to take care of the steadily increasing needs of the territory in and about this thriving community. In accordance with the well-known Copco policy, local labor and materials were used to the greatest possible extent in building this new property.

Regulating Dam
Many new line extensions were constructed in the Klamath districts during the past quarter, a considerable number of farms being electrified before the advent of winter.

An important new project scheduled for early construction is the building of a regulating dam at Klamath Falls on the river. This new dam, which will be approximately 450 feet long and 8 feet high, is expected to aid materially in regulating the flow of the river between Klamath Falls and Keno. This should prove of considerable benefit, not only to the company's operations but to the farming and logging activities in that section of Klamath county.

New Business
The splendid prune crop of Douglas county has been responsible for a substantial connected load to supply the many electric prune driers in the Umpqua division during the drying season.

The new and modern street lighting system in the city of Klamath Falls was completed and placed in active service early last fall. In addition, quite a few additional ornamental standards have been installed on the side streets and in front of enterprising business houses as a result of this up-to-date lighting system.

Dunsmuir Office
In order to render the best possible service to local customers, the Dunsmuir, California, office was recently moved to a new location next door to the post office. The new building is for appliances as well as for all office purposes.

Preferred Stock
The company's investment department has been successful in distributing over 2,500 shares of 4 per cent preferred stock in the territory served during October, November and December. It is interesting to note that repurchases by the Securities company during this period were considerably less than a year ago.

PENSION FOR OLD MEETS NO OPPOSITION

SALEM, Jan. 28. (AP)—Unanimity of opinion in favor of old age pensions, with differences as to the measure, were heard at the public hearing held last night on the pension measure before the house. The hearing room was crowded and many who wished to be heard before the joint constitutional law committee, could not get into the hearing room.

The measure under consideration provides for relief of $30 a month for dependent persons who have reached the age of 65 years, and who qualify in other respects to the measure. The bill provides, would be borne by the various counties from which applications are received, and that the county judge would perform the duties of pension commissioner.

Twelve states of the union have adopted an old age pension law and 16 others are considering legislation, it was stated by Judge Ashby Dixon of Portland, who opened the economic argument for the bill. Speakers approved the humanitarian feature of the bill, and declared it a step in the right direction, but some objection was voiced that money to operate the plan was to be raised by taxation. James Burnett of McMinnville led the argument on this feature. He declared the time was not opportune for the initiation of this measure.

Ben T. Osborne, executive secretary of the state federation of labor urged passage of the measure as it provided a system better than maintaining poor farms. He said the bill was a start in the right direction. Frank E. Davis, state head of the old age pension league, declared the measure was not a charity program but a "reward for services past rendered."

Mrs. Louise Palmer Webber of Portland, made a plea for immediate adoption of the program saying she raised a nation's hero of war, why not "pension our heroes of peace". Communities who have profited by the citizenry of these people before they reached the age of usefulness should bear the cost of the system, she stated. "Oregon is not too poor to take care of her aged."

"Mother" L. Gee, of the industrial welfare commission, endorsed the measure, declaring "poor farms are a disgrace to any state."

pay roll of the restaurants and eating places is $295,531.

The apparel group of 25 stores does a volume of business of $1,116,269, employs 60 people full time and pays out $107,356 in salaries and wages annually. This group consists of eight men's stores, six ready-to-wear stores and 11 other apparel and accessory shops.

The furniture and household group totals 19 stores, employs 51 people full time and does a business of $654,317. Sales in furniture stores amount to $356,626 of this total, while electrical and gas household-appliance stores report sales of $284,591.

Annual sales of cigar stores, coal, wood and ice business, drug stores, of which there are 19 with net sales of $570,957, feed stores, jewelry stores, florists, sporting goods businesses, music and radio stores, stationers and printers, and other minor businesses combine to bring the total to $14,616,474 in annual net sales.

Early-Day Bet Is Recalled by Photo

In the early days of Klamath Falls, shortly after its metamorphosis from Linkville, gentlemen went to any length to win a bet. That this is true, is proven by a tale told by an old timer, and inspired by one of the pictures in the exhibit on display in the windows of the chamber of commerce.

Wager Is Made
The picture which inspired the reminiscence is the one of two six mule teams each with a load of steel rails photographed on Main street. These rails were brought to Klamath Falls for the tracks of the old street-car line many years before the Southern Pacific railroad considered a road into the city.

A wager was made between Major Charles E. "Pinto" Worden and W. K. Brown. The stakes were $100 in gold, and each gentleman bet that his favorite teamster would be first to arrive in town with the first 2-ton load of rails for the proposed street railway.

Teamsters Hired
Mr. Brown hired a teamster named J. L. Buell to go to Pockema and tear up rails from a logging road, bringing them back to Klamath Falls. Buell proceeded to the spot named, and started to work unloading the rails. Upon being questioned, the resourceful teamster averred that he was employed by the Southern Pacific railroad, and that he had been authorized to help himself to the rails.

In the meantime, Major Worden had hired his teamster, and sent him forth after rails, arguing all possible haste. The "mule-teamster" proceeded south past home, secured his rails from an unknown source, and started home.

A Deep Dark Plot
All went well until the Major's teamster encountered Bob Hunsaker, one of the pioneers of the county. Hunsaker was on the Brown-Buell side, and as the story goes, he had been dispatched with several bottles of strong drink. He offered hospitality of the road to the weary teamster, and gave him advice as to which route to take, telling him that the road across the flat was much smoother than the hill route over which the driver had come.

Perhaps the road across the flat was smoother, but alas! It had no bottom, and the unfortunate teamster mired down hopelessly.

Buell Arrives
Buell entered the city of Klamath Falls the triumphant winner of the race, arriving on a bright Sabbath morning. The news quickly spread, and soon the whole population was swarming on Main street to view the rails for the metropolitan street car line.

Major Worden and Mr. Brown were in the crowd, the Major greatly disgruntled. Brown, his face wreathed in smiles, demanded the $100 staked in the wager, but the Major withheld his money until the rails had been weighed, hoping against hope that the full quota was not there. However, the scales gave honest weight, and there were exactly the two tons of steel named in the bet, with one rail to the good.

Will Rogers Does Well In Relief Work

SAN ANGELO, Tex., Jan. 28. (AP)—Will Rogers headed today for Abilene and Dallas, Tex., his fund for the southwest's unfortunate swelled $7,000 by an address here last night.

Will told his audience he recently congratulated Al Smith on dodging the presidency in these hard times. Al, he said, replied: "They'd have shot me."

The cowboy comedian added something ought to be done for the unemployed governors in Texas.

"You know when Jim Ferguson was in he was said to have been doing fairly well. He picked up a farm here and there. Well, whoever gave him a farm certainly got even with him."
