Today in Klamath's Theatres

AT THE PELICAN

"Safety Last," that great Harold Lloyd classic of the art of thrilling movie audiences, was made seven years ago, but it is still in demand, and there are few who can forget the breath-taking situations when Lloyd dangled by his finger-tips from the hands of a clock 12 stories in mid-air. The thrills of "Safety Last" seemed for a long time impossible to surpass or even equal. Even Lloyd himself has abandoned the idea of doing more thrilling thrill scenes.

But several months ago, while scouting for a new idea for "Feet First," now showing at the Pelican theatre, Lloyd hit upon a scheme which when developed offered what he feels has been his greatest opportunity for presenting spine-tingling entertainment. This is another sky-scaper angle, but different from anything that has gone before.

And it is plain to those who have previewed this picture, and audiences at the Pelican theatre since the opening of "Feet First" that these new thrills begin where "Safety Last" left off. It is a nerve-wracker, if ever there was one.

Although Lloyd had thought it impossible to equal "Safety Last," he had not reckoned on his own imaginative and creative genius. He made the thrill scenes, which come toward the end of "Feet First," at great personal risk, spending several months at work which required him to swing by his hands in precarious poses. Without his physical physique he could never have accomplished such feats. But the work was so arduous that this time it seems likely he will let "Feet First" stand as his high mark for gasping thrills and will now leave it to the rest of the film industry to try to equal his exploits.

Although "Feet First" has been "cut" down to the conventional 9,000 feet or so of the usual feature length, the Lloyd organization "shot" a total of 34,250 feet of film in making it. This is approximately 60 miles of celluloid, and is believed to constitute a record in screenland.

AT THE RAINBOW

Swinging his sombrero and shouting with joy, "The Texan" himself, is Gary Cooper, star of the great outdoor talking romance of the West, "The Virginian." Again he brings the thrills and spectacle and daring romance of the big open spaces to this town. "The Texan" is Paramount's new talking Western epic.

With Gary Cooper as his leading man, Cooper interprets the true spirit of the plains. As the Liano Kid, a young, dare-devil bandit, he accepts the proposal of a crooked gambler to go to South America and there pose as the long-lost son of a wealthy and aristocratic widow. In the pampered country of South America, he meets the beautiful niece of the charming and lovable old lady, and falls in love twice. Unable to rob the old lady and her niece, he fights to escape his bargain with the gambler.

AT THE PINE TREE

When photoplay fans of the greater new show world of eye and ear divert their thought of sophistication with dignity, delineation of delicate denouement without smirk, and finesse in characterization ranging from gutter to ballroom, there is one combination which comes to mind.

That is the famous pair of "Charming Sinners," "The Laughing Sinners," Ruth Chatterton and Olive Brook, newly and brilliantly appointed by Paramount for "Anybody's Woman," its premier engagement as a dialogue picture, now at the Pine Tree theatre.

Of course you've heard of the author, Gouverneur Morris; likely you recall the story as "The Better Wife." And certainly you've heard of Mr. Laskys lady directorial prodigy, Dorothy Arzner. Miss Arzner has accomplished another "Sarah and Son," which may have been made easy through the literary assistance of Zoe Atkins, who wrote the screen play, a duty she acquitted also for "Sarah."

The plot is a highly polished treatment of situations and manners. Brook, suavely eloquent to the flick of a cigarette ash, is a man of standing deserted by his wife. Slightly perturbed and on the loose, he meets Chatterton, show-girl at liberty following the close of production in a decency crusade. Several hours later Brook finds himself married to her, and in true sportsmanship lives up to the contract. He is ostracized by his friends, only a wealthy client continuing cordial relations; this, for a purpose disclosed later at a party in which Chatterton is the only woman guest. Certain advances made at the gathering, Brook's attitude toward the conduct of his wife and benefactor, the reappearance of his first mistress and the adjustment indicating happiness under approved relations, constitute a climax that gives everybody's woman, and everybody's man, red meat for thought.
