MAD MARRIAGE

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN Author of "HEART HUNGRY," etc.

CHAPTER XXV. The headline which had attracted Gypsy's eye was on the front page, two lines of identified type she read: "Miss Marcia Loring Weds Son of New York Manufacturer." There was a long island date line and beneath it this sentence: "The marriage of Miss Marcia Loring, daughter of Mrs. Marshall Loring and the late Marshall Loring, and Brock Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Phillips of New York, took place at high noon today at St. Andrew's church." There were footstaps behind her. With a guilty frown Gypsy looked at the paper so that the account of the wedding did not show. She placed it beside Jim's plate and then looked up. "Good morning," she said, smiling a trifle too brightly. "Good morning." Jim pulled out his chair and sat down. Gypsy poured the coffee. She began to chat busily. "Abbie's coming to take me shopping this morning," she said. "There's a sale of china and glassware at Gabriel's, and there are several things we really should have. Abbie wants to buy some crystal goblets. They have some beautiful ones, but they're so expensive! Do you want me to stop and see if your topcoat has been cleaned?" "Never mind," Jim told her. "They'll send it." She had been reading the newspaper, only half listening to what she said. Gypsy passed the toast, and mechanically he accepted a piece. Suddenly she saw a change come over his face. His eyes were intent on the page, and she knew that he had read the account of Marcia's marriage. It seemed a long time before Jim Wallace lifted his coffee cup. He must have read the brief paragraph through two or three times. At last he turned the page. "What a beautiful wedding!" he asked without looking up. His voice, which was casual, betrayed the effort that was keeping it level. Gypsy's heart bled for him. She wanted to be sympathetic, but there was nothing she could say. Jim was keeping his mystery to himself. "She said she'd come about 10," the girl answered. "Can I give you some more coffee?" Jim shook his head. "It's getting late," he said, glancing at his watch. "Wanting to get up early to start this morning. Guess I'd better be on my way. You'll excuse me?" To leave without the second cup of coffee was unheard of. Gypsy rose as the young man did and followed him to the door. There she waited a few minutes until the green roadster appeared in the drive. Usually she waved, but this morning Jim did not look around. With a sigh Gypsy returned to the breakfast table. The newspaper lay where Jim had dropped it. Gypsy picked it up and folded back the pages. Then she read the complete account of the wedding. It must have been an impressive ceremony. There was a list of names of attendants and names and details of the reception following the wedding. The newly married couple had departed for a famous Canadian mountain resort. The last paragraph read: "Mrs. Phillips and her parents formerly lived in Forest City. Since the death of her father a year ago Mrs. Phillips and her mother have made their home at Great Neck, L. I. Brock Phillips is a graduate of Princeton university, where he was a member of the tennis team and prominent in other sports. He is now associated with his father, Henry B. Phillips, owner of the Phillips Breakfast Flakes Co." On an inside page beside a column headed "Society News" there was a picture of a blonde girl in a drooping picture hat. Above was the caption, "Beomes Bride of Brock Phillips." Gypsy bent forward, staring at the picture. It was a face that generally would have been accorded lovely. The features were regular. Marcia—this other girl who had held Jim Wallace's heart so carelessly in her slim fingers and shattered it—was not smiling. The eyes were large and well placed, accented by beautiful curving brows. The nose was fastidious. If there was a flaw in her face, Gypsy thought, it was in the lips, which drew together rather tightly. They suggested arrogance. There was about Marcia Loring—now Marcia Phillips—a definite Parisian air. It was evident in the way she held her chin. Or was that merely a trick of the

Speaker Relates Objects of Scout Thrift Campaign

Ability to earn money, to spend it wisely, to share it and to save were characterized as the fundamentals in the thrift campaign of the Boy Scouts yesterday by Leo W. Sandefur, national representative of "Boy's Life" official Scout publication. Sandefur was the principal speaker at the regular meeting of the Lions club at which members of the Scout Council, troop committeemen and scoutmasters were guests. Dr. M. E. Cooper presided at the meeting and introduced O. E. Hoover, district Scout executive who introduced Sandefur. In describing the work of Scout executives, scoutmasters and committeemen Sandefur told of the objects of scouting in instilling the proper foundations for character and leadership. He declared that Scouts should expend their money through a budget system with the boys paying a 5 cent or 10 cent tax each week that they must earn for themselves. Badges, insignia, uniforms, a welfare program and reading of principles, taught through the "Boy's Life," were stressed as important parts of the budget. In explaining his points Sandefur told of achievements of other Scout troops that had come under his leadership and of problems he had in raising his own son.

SLEPT WITH DOG CHICAGO—Claude Erickson could not sleep with his animal to bed when she brought the animal to bed with her, but kissing his mother-in-law was too much, he told the court in a suit for divorce. The latter caused him great mental anguish and brought upon him a nervous breakdown, he stated.

Two questions arise in Radio Pictures' "Kiss Husbands" which opened last night at the Pine Tree Theatre in which Hunter and Joan Peers ride in run over by a locomotive. Another thrill is the accident in which Keaton and Denny figure and the wild chase down the hotel stairs and more excitement, though tinged with laughter.
