Is Chinese Unity Ahead?

CHINESE DEFENDING SELVES WELL

Supporting the Carnival

Military Strength Reflects Harmony?

Most of us have been surprised at the manner in which the Chinese have stubbornly fought off the Japanese at Shanghai, engaging even in successful counter attacks.

It is true enough that there has been little reason up to this time to hold the capabilities of the Chinese soldier in very high regard. Japan mopped up Manchuria with seeming ease, and most of the news stories about the action up there were confined to descriptions of speedy retreats of the Chinese.

That didn't happen to be the order of things when the Japanese landed at Shanghai, and a bloody and protracted battle has been under way there. It has been reported that some of the best troops of the Chinese army are at the Shanghai front, and it is not hard to believe.

Furthermore, it may be that the stubborn Chinese resistance is partly due to closer political harmony in China, resulting from the crisis into which the Japanese program has plunged the country.

Japan's enterprise may eventually drive China into the unity without which it can never be a nation in the true sense of the word. Japan has indicated excuse for its actions in that very lack of unity, alleging that because of it China has not been able to discharge the responsibilities of a nation.

It is well to add that true Chinese unity would be a tremendously good thing. So long as chaos rules in that land, immense in population, territorial size and resources, it is going to be a disturbing factor for the rest of the world.

A Little Blizzard Visits Our Land

The wind blew over the dry snow in the Klamath country Saturday morning. The powdery substance of winter was whipped into fantastic swirls, low above the pavements, and in the fields it was lifted into steam-like clouds.

Exposed places were blown bare as the brisk breeze carried on its little game. Lanes which had been cleared by man were blown full again. Fields of level snow were transformed into gentle billows.

There was no practical significance to these things. There was no economic importance, such as has been attached to the severity of the winter in general. This transient little storm did not isolate any travelers, lead to any tragedies, or otherwise win for itself a place on the front page of the metropolitan newspapers.

But it did mean something for those who took time to think upon the wonder of it all, and to look upon its beauty. In our hurried manner of life, we give too little heed to such things. We do not often enough lift our eyes to the majesty of Mt. Shasta, over there to the southwest, nor contemplate the wonders of the hills or the sunset. How much we could do to relieve the drabness of life, if we but recognized and took time to enjoy the beauty that surrounds us.

Earlier Days

February 14, 1914 Harry Pearson, former deputy sheriff and employe of the Weyerhaeuser Timber company, passed away at the Blackburn hospital last night. Death was due to lockjaw, which became manifest after a terrible injury, yet which the attending doctors fought hard to ward off. The deceased leaves a wife and six young children. He was 55 years of age.

Deputy Game Warden Carey M. Ramsby has received word from the state game farm that 24 Bob White quail will arrive here Sunday for distribution in Klamath Falls.

With the intention of looking over the agricultural possibilities of Klamath county and locate here if satisfied, 40 Russian farmers are expected here this evening.

SIDE GLANCES By George Clark

"What, no umbrellas? What kind of a drug store is this?"

Manhattan Mirrors

By The United Press NEW YORK, Feb. 13. (UP)—"No political talk is permitted here."

That sign hangs in a room in the basement of city hall—a room devoted to New York members of the G. A. R. A couple of old gentlemen sat under the sign Friday fighting again the war of their youth.

"Yep," said Mark S. Coxson, who fought at Harper's Ferry. "If they could get another gent like Abe Lincoln in that chair down to Washington people wouldn't have to eat these damned drug store meals."

"I don't ordinarily like to talk about our presidents," admitted Henry J. Kearney, vice commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., "but as long as this is Abe's birthday I'm going to say I wish to God he was back in Washington."

"I mind the time," continued Coxson, "when he walked past me and I saluted and he says, just like this, he says, 'how do you do?' and I say, 'how do you do?'"

"All I wish," suggested Kearney, "is that there was a decent saloon around here. We'd go out and drink a toast to his memory."

A cat and a dog got in a fight today and almost killed Mrs. Elizabeth Duane, of Windsor Place.

The dog belonged to Mrs. Duane and the cat came in a window. They went around and around. Mrs. Duane was asleep in an adjoining room. The dog was winning the battle when the cat took refuge on the gas stove.

A SAFE AND DESIRABLE PLACE TO BANK

For twenty-eight years this bank has proved its ability to keep going straight ahead under all conditions.

There is more in this single fact to give confidence to you as a depositor than in any words that can be written.

Think back for a moment and consider all the changes that have taken place in this country and in this community since this bank was organized. It will help to give you a better idea of the solidness and permanence of this time-tested institution.

In every respect this is a safe and desirable place to bank.

quired for the fluid in the semi-circular canals to readjust itself to the new situation. Anything that interferes with the mechanism of the semi-circular canals will produce attacks of dizziness. Sometimes these attacks take the form of making the person feel that everything else is moving while he is standing still; sometimes he feels himself moving when he is not.

If the body tends to accumulate acid, a sense of dizziness is a prominent symptom.

Since the eye helps the internal ear and the muscle sense to judge position in space, any disorder affecting the ability of the eye to coordinate with these other senses will result in this symptom.

If the sensation of dizziness is transitory, and if it yields promptly to proper hygiene, such as suitable attention to the diet, digestion, the action of the kidneys, and correction of disorders of vision, the person need not feel disturbed. However, repeated dizziness, which may be the result of an insufficient blood supply to the brain, of insufficient action of the heart, of a tumor growing in connection with the semi-circular canals, or of some disturbance in the brain, demands careful scientific study. A spell of dizziness, like a cough, is a danger sign—unless heeded disaster may ensue.

Then exercise by bending, twisting, lying on your back and touching the floor with your toes thrown up over your head. Cut out too much beverage and heavy foods. Get a lot of sleep. If your eyes don't shine more in a month's time at this strict regime, then I am all wrong.

There are certain eye lotions which do help rest tired eyes and thus aid in making eyes look lustrous and beautiful. These and other medicinal drops, specifically prescribed by specialists, are not to be confused with the indiscriminate use of any kind of drops alleged to make your eyes shine.

Eyes are tremendously sensitive. They reflect your whole condition, physical, mental, spiritual. It is foolish to think you can add any little drop of this or that to counteract a whole life. Start making your eyes beautiful by taking expert care of them and of your whole body.

Klamath Names

WHEELER CREEK Wheeler creek, Crater Lake National park, Klamath county. This stream was named for James H. Wheeler of Fort Klamath, one time deputy sheriff. Wheeler was a trapper, and spent a great deal of time, often alone for long periods, in the mountains with his traps. This information was furnished by Captain O. C. Applegate of Klamath Falls.

Japan has run amuck, has defied public opinion of the world, violated a score of treaty obligations and employed violence in a fashion more wanton than anything witnessed in the World War.—Stanley High, former editor of the Christian Herald.

Fashion Tips

One question put frequently to beauty editors is "What drops can I use to make my eyes shine?"

My answer to that is flat and emphatic: "None!"

If you use eye drops because a specialist recommended them to you because of some eye trouble, that is that. But to go out gunning for something to make your eyes glisten is a dangerous thing.

It is much simpler to keep yourself healthy and happy so that your eyes will shine naturally. And if you can't manage that, make-up is so easy today that you can seem to make your eyes shine glamorously by using the right kind of eye shade, a touch of oil before the shade and a deft bit of makeup on the lashes.

One of the most efficacious ways to clear up the whites of your eyes, which act tends to make your eyes glisten and gleam attractively, is to keep your old liver working hard and your digestive track in general good order.

Take a glass of hot water the first thing in the morning, with the juice of a whole lemon in it.
