WASHINGTON
 News Behind the News
 The Inside Story From The Capital

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13.—The congressional rush to get right with the president is virtually a stampede now.

Take the house appropriations committee, for example.

Most of the thirty-five congressmen on that committee wanted to restore government wages. Apparently the only strong dissenter was Boylan of New York. The rest were eager to abolish the 15 per cent wage cut. It was the politic thing to do. It meant more purchasing power for themselves as well as their friends in public office.

Mr. Roosevelt was informed of the sentiment in the committee and asked members to drop in to see him. They did, and immediately became converted to a 5 per cent instead of a 15 per cent restoration.

School Not to Aid Book Sale
 By Albert Bergman
 K. U. H. S. Correspondent

Second hand school books will not be handled by the students room at the Klamath high school after this semester, according to Principal Paul T. Jackson.

"We do not intend to run a book store, and neither do we like to compete with merchants down town in selling books," was his reason for discontinuing this service. All books now in the students' room will be returned to their respective owners at the end of the semester.

It has been the policy in the past, to sell the last year's books for the students at a price set by themselves, keeping only a nickel for the service rendered.

BLV ITEMS

BLV, Ore.—Cold weather in this district has made it possible for Weyerhaeuser loggers to resume operations. Low temperatures have hardened the roads. The mill crew started work early in the week, and both merchants and citizens were greatly cheered by the new activities.

Building has been considerable here recently. Mr. Waldeck has added a kitchen to one of his smaller cabins. Jack Hannan is erecting a garage, smoke house and store room.

CWA work has progressed at Bly with the landscaping of the school grounds.

George Campbell and Albert Richardson motored to Klamath Falls Wednesday. They were interested in obtaining further CWA projects for Bly.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stump are congratulating the couple on the birth of a daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor of Beatty have named their new daughter, Donna Lou.

Mrs. Everett Lynch was hostess to the Bly Needle club recently. Ten members of the club were present. Mrs. Bob Bailey assisted the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Hemelwright are vacationing in northwestern Oregon.

Rev. Sigle Returns—Rev. Leonard Sigle of the First Baptist church, with Mrs. Sigle and their son, returned Thursday from New Pine Creek. Rev. Sigle will conduct regular services Sunday.

Boy Can We Take It!

A FEW YEARS AGO THIS WAS A STAGGERING SUM

$1,000,000,000

BUT NOW

$10,000,000,000 GOVERNMENT SPENDING PROGRAM

OH POOH! TUT TUT!

Water System Problem

NOT the least of the troubles of Mayor Mahoney and the city's special engineers, in their efforts to prepare a feasible municipal water plan, is the purchase of the existing system now owned and operated by the California Oregon Power company.

Salem's experience with such a problem is thus of particular interest here. The capital city this week instituted condemnation proceedings to acquire the existing distribution system of the Oregon Washington Water Service, after struggling for months with this question.

Because of its inability thus far to solve the problem of the purchase of the existing system, Salem has been unable to take advantage of a $1,500,000 PWA loan and grant for its water system.

Funds spent for the purchase of an existing system are "dead money" so far as creating work is concerned. As is well known, government financial help is given for the purpose of creating employment. Salem was allocated money for the construction phase of its water program only, and thus far has met with no success in its effort to obtain a supplemental loan to finance purchase of the distribution plant. The government, also, required that Salem must acquire the private plant before the construction loan is made available—a demand the capital city is seeking to modify.

This gives some idea of this particular phase of the Klamath water system problem, which probably has other tough ramifications. Copco, it is said, would be quite happy to unload the local system, provided, of course, it gets the price it thinks it ought to have. The power company, according to report, isn't in the water business because it wants to be, nor has it found it a lucrative enterprise in spite of the crying about high rates, which is something for Klamath Falls to think about as it contemplates going in for a much heavier investment to bring water from Anna creek and also to acquire the system here for distribution purposes.

Salem has found the federal government a rather stern task master. But, so far as the local proposal goes, the fact that the government has hard-headed engineers and financial and legal experts who must pass on these questions before federal money is advanced, offers a measure of security against a serious mistake in public policy.

Washington's Liquor Plan

IN THE interim pending the outcome of Klamath Falls' suit against the Knox state liquor law, it is interesting to note what our sister state of Washington is doing toward statutory control of the demon rum.

From the Salem Statesman, we borrow a synopsis of Washington's new liquor law, on which legislative action is now being concluded. It is notable that it follows quite closely the Oregon plan now under attack. The Washington plan:

Control—Under "Washington state liquor control board" of three members, salary $4,500 each.

Classification—"Beer" defined as containing up to 4 per cent alcohol; stronger beer, ale, porter and stout above 4 per cent; "wine" including both natural fermentation and fortified wines up to 17 per cent; "spirits" include brandy and whiskey and other beverages containing alcohol obtained by distillation. All percentages by weight.

State Liquor Stores—Sell by the package and have a monopoly on all varieties except beer, sacramental wine and prescriptions filled by druggists.

Where It Can Be Sold
 Beverages may be distributed through other channels as follows:
 Beer—By the bottle at any store, by the glass or open bottle in taverns, drug stores and soda fountains; with meals in hotels, restaurants and clubs and on common carriers. Brewers may distribute directly with a tax of $1 a barrel.
 Wine and Stronger Beer—With meals in hotels, restaurants and clubs and on common carriers, also by the bottle at private stores.
 Druggists—Must purchase from state stores at same prices charged to individual consumers and resold only on physicians' prescriptions.
 Clubs—Must obtain licenses entitling members to keep "reasonable" quantity of liquor for personal consumption. Bars, "clubs" operating for private profit or organized for sole purpose of liquor distribution.
 Banquets—Special permits may be issued to allow liquor to be served at banquets.
 Disposition of Profits—To old age pension bill, 35 per cent; to state general fund, 20 per cent; to cities and counties, 45 per cent. Total profits estimated by advisory commission at $4,500,000 yearly.
 Penalties—Consumption of liquor in public place, $10; public drunkenness, $10 for first offense, increasing with subsequent convictions.

The outcome of Chilouquin's effort to obtain federal aid for airport construction is of much interest here, not only because Chilouquin is a neighbor and customer of Klamath Falls, but because its airport plans work into the scheme for development of an east-mountain aviation route. Commendable progressiveness and aggressiveness is being demonstrated by the northern Klamath community in this matter, and it deserves success.

Think only fine thoughts, says a current editorial on New Year's resolutions. Which, we suppose, means that if a bad thought comes along, don't think it.

There ought to be more snow in them thar hills.
