Retaliation May Hurt

THE Klamath Empire, a great lumber area, gives San Francisco a generous share of its business. There are several other large pine lumber-producing sections in the San Francisco trade area which, like Klamath Falls, must look askance at the part the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce sees fit to play in the fight of the pine industry for an equitable readjustment of freight rates on canned goods shipped in fiber and wooden containers.

Information has been received here to the effect the Bay City chamber has protested the proposed rates which would accomplish this purpose so vitally important to the box lumber industry. An interstate commerce commission hearing on the case has been set for San Francisco on January 31.

As we understand it, the situation is about like this: Freight rates are based on weights. Wooden boxes are somewhat heavier than fiber containers, with the result that on a transcontinental movement a carload of canned goods in fiber containers enjoys a favorable difference of from $40 to $60.

However, wooden boxes are better containers than fiber. They hold up better than their competitors during a long freight haul, reducing losses. On this basis, a proposal was made to equalize the rates, establishing them on the actual weight of the goods shipped, plus the weight of the lighter container. This is a step toward the situation in England, where net weight basis has now been universally adopted by the railroads.

The railroads west of Chicago approved the proposal, but the eastern lines would not concur. The western lines went ahead and published supplemental rate schedules. Then came the San Francisco chamber of commerce protest, an attempt to knife a plan which would give the pine mills a chance to recapture part of a tremendous business lost to fiber boxes. The loss to western pine mills amounted to 200,000,000 feet annually, approximately the total Klamath cut the present year.

This is a growing country, facing both north and south in our trade relations. The San Francisco chamber would do well to realize the Klamath area is in a position to recognize friendly and unfriendly treatment, and to reciprocate in kind.

Knox Law Decision

THE decision of Circuit Judge Lewelling, upholding the constitutionality of the Knox state liquor law, may or may not indicate what the supreme court will have to say about the matter. Judge Lewelling's decision certainly was not a perfunctory one, although it was known that whatever his action might be, the question would go to the higher tribunal. A judge doesn't like to be reversed, and the experience is particularly unwelcome in a matter of statewide interest.

The lay public now has the opinion of Attorney General Van Winkle that the law is unconstitutional, and the decision of Judge Lewelling that it is constitutional, as something to consider while the action of the supreme court is awaited. As we remember it, Van Winkle's opinion was not so emphatic and comprehensive as the circuit judge's decision.

Considerable interest here centers around what effect final defeat of the city's Knox law suit, might have on the political fortunes of Mayor Willis E. Mahoney, who is giving thought to the matter of running for governor.

HERE are some interesting figures:

The Russian wheat crop for 1933 is placed by the latest figures available at the rather surprising total of 1,019,500,000 bushels. This is within nine million bushels of the largest crop ever grown by Russia, which was in 1913, and totalled 1,028,000,000. The largest wheat crop ever grown by the United States was in 1915, and totalled 1,026,000,000 bushels.

IT THUS appears that present capacity for wheat production in the United States and Russia is about the same. But Russia has three and one-half times as much land suitable for wheat as the United States.

It is easy to deduce from these figures that in the United States, because of superior methods, we are able to grow about three and one-half times as much wheat on an acre as they have so far been able to grow in Russia.

But we can ALSO deduce that if Russia IMPROVES her methods, as she is trying to do, so that in time they equal ours, she will be able to produce some three and one-half times as much wheat as we can—which is another way of saying that she can produce around three and one-half times as much as she is able to produce now.

If Russia should put in excess of three billion bushels of wheat on the market in a year, it would create quite a disturbance, wouldn't it?

BUT here are some more interesting figures:

Russia's largest exportation of wheat was in 1909, when her total sold abroad amounted to 200 million bushels. Her next largest exportation totalled 113 million bushels.

With higher standards of living, resulting from her five-year plan and other advancements, her own requirements are increasing steadily, so that in time she may be consuming ALL her own wheat.

A LOT of people are inclined to look upon Russia's advancement as a menace to the rest of the world. That isn't necessarily true.

As living standards in Russia increase, it may be that she will not only consume more of her own production, but at the same time will provide an increasing market for the products of the rest of the world.
