President's Mother Recalls Incidents of Son's Boyhood

By MARY E. PLUMMER NEW YORK, Jan. 30, (AP)—Mrs. James Roosevelt today recalled the first birthday of "my boy, Franklin."

While the nation celebrated his fifty second anniversary, the president's mother remembered the sunny upstairs room in their house on the Hudson—the room where Franklin was born.

It came near being a dark day—that January day fifty two years ago. For, as the president's mother recalled in her book published last year, "when he was born I was given too much chloroform, and it was nearly fatal to us both."

"The nurse said she never expected the baby to be alive, and was surprised to find that he was."

He was born in their own home—the long, rambling house at Hyde Park to which Sara Delano came as a bride. One never went to hospitals in those days.

"Anyway," says Mrs. Roosevelt, "I think it's nicer for a baby to be born in his own home."

She never dreamed then that her son would be president. That was the last thing she ever imagined for him.

What was her ambition for him? Very simple, she says. "To grow to be like his father—straight and honorable, just and kind, an upstanding American."

Not only as he is now, but as he was then—a baby, "plump, pink and nice"—she sees her son today.

She thinks, too, of his Welsh pony; of the "sailboat" he and his playmates built in the top of a tree, and his early declaration, "I'm a seafaring man."

Pictures from his boyhood recur; such pictures as the time when she admonished him, "Franklin, where is your obedience?" and he grinned, "My obedience has gone upstairs for a walk."

She sees, too, that more significant scene, a foretaste of his executive life to come, when she said, "don't give all the orders, Franklin."

And her son, digging a fort with a playmate, answered, "Mummmie, if I didn't give the orders nothing would happen."

An Omaha woman's claim for a $50,000 legacy rests on the word "happiness." But many suits for larger amounts rest on the word "promise."

AUTHENTIC DRESS FEATURE OF PLAY

Suits and dresses of the period around 1850 will costume the cast of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," which will be presented Thursday night at the Pine Tree theatre by the Little Theatre guild.

The costumes are authentic—in fact, some were worn by people of that day, as is seen by the occasional darts and threadbare spots. The entire outfitting was done by a San Francisco costume company which prides itself on its elaborate perfection of detail.

Most colorful of all are the men's vests of fancy, bright colored velvet; the variegated hues in their boot-strap trousers, and their ruffled cuffs and shirt fronts will supply the audience with interest.

The women's clothes are not so interesting, in that they are most sedate. Meticulous, the sentimental girl, gaily dressed in pastel organdy, with a flowered hat and a little black parasol.

But Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. Slade, while their costumes are absolutely authentic, move serenely in full skirts and tight bodices. Little Mary's costume of pink-flowered organdy is typical of the little girls' dresses of 80 years ago.

In an endeavor to be authentic to the last detail, the costumes in the last act, which occurs ten years later than those preceding it, are of a style exactly ten years later than the clothes worn earlier in the play.

To carry out the color of the period, ushers in the theatre will be costumed in the style of 1850 also.

The First 30 Days Are the Hardest. HERE January is almost gone and if one of your resolutions was to operate in the New Year on a family budget plan, you have already experienced many of the temptations to abandon it. It takes courage and patience and careful planning to live by the budget. The first principle of careful buying is daily study of the advertisements in your newspaper. Nothing can be more helpful to you in making your dollars go farthest than the opportunities and economies revealed to you through the advertisements in this newspaper.
