The records, Dr. Byerly said, greatly resembled those of the severe shock in Nevada in December, 1922.

HITLER SENDS PEACE PLEDGE TO AUSTRINIANS

unjustified reproaches and to meeting them with distrust.

Italians Praised
"We hold that it is each people's own business to determine its own domestic life."

The declaration of Austro-Germany relations was followed by a tribute to Premier Mussolini of Italy and to Italy herself.

To Joseph Stalin, head of the communist party, Hitler addressed an admonition. He said: "Just as little as in Russia would be tolerated a German national socialist tendency, will Germany tolerate a communist tendency or even communistic propaganda."

In relation to Poland, Hitler said that when he became chancellor there was danger that the differences between Poland and Germany might lead to a political and hereditary enmity.

Turning to the problem of capital and labor, Hitler said: "We have laid the foundations for an order in which the brute force of the economically stronger gives place to the higher interests of the community to which engaged in creative work."

Religion Held Stronger
Regarding religion, the chancellor declared:

"By removing political organizations we have strengthened religious institutions. We all expect that by the union of Protestant state churches and faiths in one Evangelical Reich's church, we will give real satisfaction to the yearnings of those who thought they saw in the incoherency of Protestant life a weakening of power of the Evangelical faith."

Hitler launched into a tirade against monarchism, saying: "I desire herewith to protest against the thesis that Germany can be happy again only under its hereditary rulers."

"No; we are one people, and we desire to live in one reich. Despite all the appreciation of the values of monarchy, and all the devotion to the really great kaisers and kings in our history, the question of the final form which the state is to take is today outside all discussion."

"Whoever may finally be the nation's head will receive his call from the German people, and will be responsible to them alone."

MILLS LAUNCHES ATTACK AGAINST F. R. POLICIES

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 30. (AP) Ogden L. Mills, secretary of the treasury at the close of the Hoover administration, delivered a stinging criticism last night of the Roosevelt recovery policies.

The address, delivered at a Kansas day banquet here, was regarded by many as Mill's opening bid for the republican nomination for president in 1936.

Attacks Central Power
Mills made a vigorous attack on the great centralization of power in the hands of the president. He criticized the monetary maneuvers of the administration's asserted attempt to regulate the daily life of its citizens. He warned of dire results if emergency farm relief measures are made a permanent policy.

"Silence is not a virtue," Mills told his 1300 listeners in the republican stronghold of Kansas, urging his party to adopt a questioning attitude toward proposed recovery policies.

Free Discussion Essential
"Open discussion and honest criticism are essential to the functioning of democratic institutions," he said.

"In our country up to the present time, this commonplace saying has been taken for granted. Lately, however, it has assumed a new and all important meaning, because free discussion and an informed public opinion are incompatible with the planned and managed national life which seems to be the ultimate objective of the present administration."

"We are witnessing revolutionary changes in our governmental and economic structure without popular mandate," he added.

Critics of Congress
"Under these circumstances silence is not a virtue, and while mere partisan objection would be intolerable, it is the duty of the minority to insist that important measures shall not be adopted until they have been subjected to the tests of critical analysis and open discussion."

Mills severely criticized congress for its hurried granting of unprecedented powers to President Roosevelt.

"The abdication by the congress and the delegation of powers to the executive are in effect creating a government of men without any practical limitations of law," he said.

R. G. Dale Back From Portland

R. G. Dale, Klamath representative of the Equitable Savings and Loan association, has returned from Portland where he attended a district meeting of company officials. Officials from Oregon, Washington and Idaho attended the all-day session last Saturday.
