night.

The commission was told at the hearing that about 8,000 women in Multnomah county are registered on federal unemployment rolls, and that perhaps 1500 more would be out of work if the 6 p. m. closing hour should be enforced.

In 1915 the first regulation be enforced.

In 1919 the first regulation prohibiting women working in mercantile stores after 6 p. m., was promulgated. About two years ago it was contested and held discriminatory. The last legislature changed the statutes to give the commission state-legislature changed the statutes to give the commission state-wide-authority, and the new regulation was issued February 3. A storm of protests arose from groups purporting to speak for the employed women.

A further complication arose at yesterday's meeting when it developed that it is unlawful for women to work where intoxicating liquor is served. Under the new laws of the state, intoxicating liquor is defined as containing more than one half of one per cent of alcohol. Dorr E. Keasey, chairman of the commission, did not say what action the state in this connection.

attention to the heavy expenditure of federal funds for relief and emergency employment purposes in Klamath county. The committee is asking for an increase in the county relief budget for March of about 60 percent over February, or approximately $12,000.

The relief committee discussed the possibilities of promoting gardening this year, and decided to take advantage of the government's offer of seed for relief gardening purposes. Miss Phyllis Harizog, head of the relief unit, was instructed to confer with County Agent C. A. Henderson on gardening plans.

Manager Haldwin of the CWA said that the reduced quota of men allowed Klamath county, and the necessity for concentrating in the centers of greatest unemployment, require that the work on irrigation districts be brought to a close at the end of the present week.

The robbers held 1,000 townspeople at bay, wounded a policeman, and forced five persons including four women, to accompany them as shields against the fire of pursuers.

The women, carried on the running board of their car to several miles out of town, where they were released, were Mrs. Alice Blegen, Mrs. Mildred Bostwick, Miss Emma Knabach and Miss Mary Lucas. Leon Olson, teller, and fifth prisoner, was released earlier at the city limits. Reports that John Dillinger, escaped killer, may have led the gang, were discounted by officials of the bank, who said there was no resemblance by any of the bandits to Dillinger.
