"RUFF" RAGLANS

Novelty in Weaves and Models in the Spring Topcoats

Our key models cover the most part single-breasted. The coat vogue for spring. They may be classified as follows: The Raglan type which can include the Balmacaan coats; the Polo coat which may also include the latest innovation the Wrap-around, the Guard, a fitted coat and straight box coat which embraces the Chesterfield type.

These are basic but various designers have expressed their versatility with some clever modifications of detail. The Raglans are shown this spring, with or without belts and are for the full both back and front than the Balmacaan of last fall.

Polo Still Popular

The polo coat hasn't relinquished any of its popularity or its standing with those who prescribe our styles. It retains its basic features this spring but presents a variation that is both swaggy and novel. That is the Wrap-around coat which has all of the Polo characteristics except that it has no buttons whatever and it is held closed by a girdle which ties in a loop or is fastened by a ring. It's of English derivation and is going big with the university men.

The Guard Coat is the dress coat of the season and is a prime favorite of men who like form-fitting garments. This coat is a double-breasted effect with large peak lapels, shaped in at the waist, full over the hips and amply skirted.

The Box Coat has several variations. It is shown single or double-breasted, with or without belt back. It is almost straight hanging from shoulder to bottom showing but a slight shaping in at the waistline which is a bit more accentuated in the double-breasted models than in the single. Its nearest relation is the Chesterfield which this season is mainly fly-front, single breasted, a bit shorter in length than the box coat but otherwise following the same characteristics.

BRIMS A LA MODE

More Latitude in Brims This Spring

Men will be able to "use their heads" more in the selection of their hats this Spring. In recent seasons there has been less latitude in the variety of brims ordained by fashion so that the fine discrimination of selecting hats to the features has, more or less, become a neglected art.

This Spring however, brims are more diversified ranging from the close-set Homburg to the more expansive "Trooper" shape so that men can "square off" or elongate the effect according to what his particular type of physiognomy demands. Moreover, fashion advises that the one-hat man is not going to be able to live up to the dress demands of the season. Suits for spring and summer are very definitely of two types: dress or business clothes and sport clothes.

The One-Hat Man Passes

The Homburg, or its half-brother, the semi-Homburg are specifically the hats for more formal and dress wear while the snap varieties will top-off the lounge and sport apparel. Another factor that arises to influence hat selection is the trend
