

TWO POLITICAL CLUBS FORMED ON WEDNESDAY

Politicians campaigning for state jobs swooped into Klamath Falls Wednesday and before the day was over, two strong political clubs were organized and a labor commissioner candidate endorsed by the Klamath Falls central labor council.

In meetings held Wednesday evening an "Upton for Congress" club and "Abrams for Secretary of State" club were organized. Carle Abrams, republican candidate for secretary of state, spent all day Wednesday in Klamath Falls, organized his club which is headed by J. H. Carnahan, local attorney, and spoke before the reserve officers meeting and the central labor council before leaving for Ashland later in the evening.

Gust Anderson, republican candidate for state labor commissioner likewise spent Wednesday in the city and received the endorsement of the central labor council before leaving. More than 50 prominent men of Klamath county met in the evening at the county court house to support the candidacy of Jay H. Upton, republican candidate for representative in congress. Officers and directors were elected and representatives appointed in all sections of the county. The officers elected are: Les Finley, president; E. V. Hillius, secretary and treasurer. DEALERS, GROWERS DEBATE SALE PLAN

A general plan for handling the 1933 rye grass seed crop in Oregon to prevent the market from breaking under the influence of a prospective surplus production was laid before a conference of seed dealers and growers held at Oregon State college the third week in April. The plan was proposed in general terms by James Jenks, Jr., seed dealer of Salem and Albany, and while no definite action was taken at this meeting, considerable interest was shown in the idea.

Two years ago rye grass prices dropped almost to the vanishing point under the influence of an unmarketable surplus. The surplus was cleaned up this last year because the 1933 crop was a failure, due to winter freezing. With prospects of a large crop this year, dealers and producers asked the college to sponsor a conference looking to avoiding a repetition of the former difficulties.

Should the trade in Oregon fail to enter into a voluntary plan of surplus control and price regulation as proposed by the conference, laws exist whereby a code could be imposed on the industry to force orderly marketing, some speakers pointed out.

Need for better sales promotion of Oregon rye grass seed, and above all, the need of putting out a better quality so far as purity of strain and freedom from weed seed is concerned was emphasized by several. G. R. Hyslop, head of plant industries, explained the certification program with English rye grass, at the H. A. Schoth, federal agronomist discussed the various species and varieties being grown.

E. F. Burlington of Forest Grove called attention to the growing need for both surplus and quality control in the hairy vetch and Austrian pea deals, saying that the volume of these crops for seed is closely approaching the saturation point of present markets.

Oregon has the opportunity of developing its seed industry to far greater proportions than now obtain, but this can be done profitably only through a plan of statewide control to discourage surplus production and discriminate "distress sales" of the surplus, which wrecks the price for the whole crop. Dean W. A. Schoenfeld told the conference.

Warren Returns After Matches Through North

Roland T. Warren, Klamath's own middleweight grappler, returned Wednesday evening from a two and a half weeks' tour of the northern part of the state, Washington and Canada.

While in the north, Warren had eight matches, winning four, losing two and received a draw on two.

Tanned from spending much of his vacation time out of doors, Warren says, "I'm ready to meet any middleweight on the Pacific Coast."

While in Portland, Warren said he was looked up by Herb Owen, Portland match-maker, who suggested matches between him, Bulldog Jackson, Robb, Reed and Sneeze Achleu. "I'd like to meet some of those fellows," Warren said, "but I like Klamath Falls too well to spend much time in other places."

Warren is an engineer for the California Oregon Power company, and returned to his duties following his three weeks vacation.
