

REGULATIONS FOR CONTROL OF GAME OUT

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has announced two new regulations for the control of hunting and fishing in the national forests. Under these regulations it will be possible to extend or to shorten hunting and fishing seasons in the national forests with a view to managing the wild life resources of these federal properties to conserve both the timber and soils of the forests and the animals, birds and fish. The Forest Service plans to apply these new fish and game regulations only where present cooperative arrangements for managing the wild life within national forests have proved inadequate.

"Regulation G-20 A is designed solely to provide such wild life management on national forest areas or streams as will secure adequate protection, development, and utilization of all resources. It is hoped it will promote closer cooperation and aid in the application of practical plans which have been developed by the Forest Service and cooperating agencies. It will be applied only where cooperative efforts have proved inadequate," said F. A. Silcox, chief forester.

In announcing the regulations, Secretary Wallace pointed out that in some instances they may lead to long seasons and heavy bag limits for hunters of certain animals in areas where natural multiplication has led to overstocking of the forest resources. In some areas deer have multiplied beyond the capacity of the range to such an extent that they not only are injuring young trees and soil, because of overgrazing, but many deer have actually died of starvation. In such instances seasons and bag limits may be increased until the number of deer is reduced to the stable carrying capacity of the forest.

In other areas, he said, the lands in government ownership are not now producing as much wild life as would be possible under wise management, and the new regulations will enable the secretary—acting after investigation by the forest service—to restrict hunting and fishing until game or fish have multiplied to a degree where they are making effective use of the property. The new regulations look toward the management of the wild life crop on a sustained production basis, coordinated with other essential uses of the forest areas.

The national forests, with 162,009,145 acres of federal land, are the principal ranges for the big game animals of the west, especially during the summer period. The enlarged program for the purchase of forest and mountainous lands for national forest purposes east of the Great Plains will make these properties also important aids in wild life development and management. That all land should be devoted to its most productive use is a principle that has guided forest service policy for 29 years. This principle has been applied to range primarily adapted to wild life, and land use plans have been developed accordingly. Although its application has resulted in a great increase in big game animals on the national forests in the past 10 years, the forest service realizes there is need for more intensive game management. This is indicated by the fact that many areas still support only a relatively small fraction of the wild life they might support, and on other large areas there is more wild life than the land can carry.
