GILMORE GASOLINE USED BY WINNERS

Immediately following the Indianapolis 500-mile speed classic last Wednesday, E. J. Sanders, technical representative of the Gilmore Oil company, flashed the news to the home office of the concern in Los Angeles that drivers of three of the first four cars over the famous finish line used Gilmore gasoline with tetraethyl. They were Mauri Rose, Lou Moore and Deacon Litz, who respectively finished second, third and fourth in the record breaking dash, out of a field of 33 starters. Significant of the power and economical operation of the Gilmore gasoline was the fact that at the completion of the race showed that he burned only 36 1/2 gallons of motor fuel despite the rules which allowed a maximum of 45 gallons of gasoline. This is an average of better than 13.88 miles per gallon of gasoline while averaging a speed of 104.98 miles per hour in the 500-mile race, which, incidentally, broke last year's record of 104.162 miles per hour.

Constance Bennett, who plays what is said to be the most intriguing role of her entire career as a secret service agent in "After Tonight," at the Pine Tree theatre tomorrow, introduces a new song hit, "Buy a Kiss," in the production. The number, which Miss Bennett sings while disguising her spying activities as a cafe entertainer, is a Viennese waltz composed by Max Steiner, head of the RKO-Radio music department.

AT THE RAINBOW
If rapid-fire action and hilarious comedy comprise your idea of the elements that a good motion picture should contain, then don't fail to see "City Limits," the fast-moving Monogram comedy drama playing at the Rainbow theatre tomorrow.
"City Limits" has both ingredients in elaborate profusion, starting from the moment that Ray Walker, as a star reporter, is assigned by his city editor to get the story of a big railroad merger, until the final fade-out when Frank Craven, as president of the railroad, entertains two hoboes at his palatial estate.

AT THE VOX
When Edmund Goulding found something he didn't like in the script of "Riptide," he had to sit down between scenes and rewrite it himself.
For, as well as being director of the new Norma Shearer vehicle now at the Vox theatre, Goulding also is author, having written the gismorous romance especially for Miss Shearer's return to the screen.

Goulding, who has written numerous stage and screen hits, besides winning recognition as an outstanding film director, last screened "Grand Hotel" and "Blonde of the Follies."
