

SNOW BRINGS MORE MISERY; STORM FEARED

as far as Cincinnati, the snow turned into a virtual blizzard. Red Cross Work Hastens

Red Cross officials, fearing many deaths from exposure, hastened supplies to the cold-water swept cities.

Stimulating the work of reconstruction in the devastated areas, President Roosevelt allocated $43,000,000 of federal relief funds to the works progress administration for repairs and replacements.

Over the debris-strewn areas of waste, rescue officials feared the loss of life would increase as workmen tore through the ruins of buildings and as rivers receded.

To the thousands of refugees, huddled in relief shelters in West-ern Pennsylvania and down the Ohio to Wheeling—a panorama of destruction and misery from three days of rampaging waters—the storm brought a new danger—pneumonia.

Water shortages in many communities already had threatened pestilence.

Emergency Station Set Up

To prevent epidemics, the United States public health service kept its most skillful experts laboring in all the stricken communities.

Every sanitary engineer from the Washington headquarters was sent to Pennsylvania and West Virginia to set up emergency chlorination systems. From other units, engineers were rushed to flood-swept communities elsewhere in the east.

The snow hampered clean-up and reclamation work in the Pittsburgh-Johnstown area.

Some 25,000 WPA workers were mobilized in Pittsburgh and 6,000 in Johnstown to give all aid. There was no heat in Johnstown, and many of the 6,000 destitute there were ill.

Likewise in Wheeling, between 8,000 and 10,000 homeless shivered throughout the day in temporary quarters.

In Pittsburgh, there was a gradual return of facilities. More electric power was brought in, gas was returned to several buildings in the "Golden Triangle," wealthy downtown area which was covered two days ago with 18 feet of water.

New Channel Cut

Above Pittsburgh, the Allegheny, while near normal, was cutting a new channel around a giant waterway lock. Engineers strove with stone and bags of cement to keep the river in its course.

Aside from the Connecticut and the southern Ohio, rivers generally throughout the east were either receding steadily or were back in their banks.

But the recession only brought the rest of the world the plight of many communities during the worst hours of the flood devastation.

Williamsport, on the Susquehanna in Pennsylvania, was typical of the most severely stricken towns. Little had been heard from it for many hours. Communication was cut off, and meager radio reports had told of fires. Some revised estimates of the damage in this industrial town ran as high as $3,000,000. Four thousand were homeless. The need for clothing was acute.

While snow and rain fell over widespread upstate New York areas, rehabilitation work continued at a steady pace. Thousands of persons in the Binghamton area, most severely isolated and stricken city in the state, were returned to their homes, but new dangers threatened the city. The escape of gas began from a fuel gas tank. WPA and CCC workers hurriedly went to work to repair the tank.

Many upstate communities, however, were still without light or power.

Industry Shut Down

Temperatures were only slightly above freezing, adding to the misery of the homeless and hampering the work of "mopping up."

In New England, as elsewhere over the east, the rate of feeding the thousands of homeless and refugees created a serious situation.

Industry was at a standstill down the rich valleys of the Connecticut, Merrimack and other rivers.

The great textile mills of Lowell, Mass., were shut tight, with 20,000 persons made idle. Thousands were idle in other mill towns and industrial centers.

Up in Maine, martial law regulated the town of Rumford, isolated for two days by the Androscoggin river. Communication was established with the town of 8,000 today. The townsfolk were suffering severely. Five hundred families were being cared for by state military and local authorities.

Farmers, leaving their lowlands for the town, took with them food and milk, thus averting a shortage.

The desolation in Hartford was described by Robert MacGregor, Hartford newspaper man who flew over the city:

"Roofs of houses penetrated the rushing blanket of water like tiny islands.

"Brainard Field hangars appeared like tilted rafts; Colt's factory was surrounded by water and resembled the government buildings on Ellis island in New York harbor.

"The flocks of people who lined the water fronts appeared like black moving chains. The Williams railroad bridge was submerged on one end, and seemed to tip into the water like a roller coaster."

The threatened milk shortage in Boston was averted when 30 trucks arrived from the New York dairy area.

Massachusetts state senate passed a bill providing for appropriation of $750,000 for flood relief. The money will be spent for food, clothing and shelter.

Antelope Delight in Racing Machines

BEND, Ore., March 21. (P)—From Central Oregon's high desert came a story today of five antelope that delight in racing automobiles along the lonely road from Bend to Burns.

Showing no fear of the cars, a quintet of pronghorns raced several machines for miles over the desert, paralleling the highway as they ran.

Motorists arriving here reported that in some instances the antelope were able to outrun the cars, especially along sections of the highway damaged by recent storms.

Students Injured in Texas Rioting

ABILENE, Texas, March 21. (P)—Police were called out here today to quell a general melee between 52 members of the band from Texas Technological college at Lubbock and about the same number of Hardin-Simmons university students, who were reported to have "ganged" the Matador musicians as they drove out of Abilene in two buses. The fight was waged along the highway.

Four Tech bandmen were brought here to have wounds treated. Several of the attackers also were reported beaten.

NATIONS WAIT GERMAN VIEW ON PROPOSALS

burg, Hitler asserted, "Germany is ready to accept the plan, even though her representatives participated in the formation of it.

Italy, as well as Germany, had yet to accept the plan, even though her representatives participated in the formation of it.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press LONDON, March 21. (U.P)—Great Britain Thursday called upon Germany to contribute to the peace of Europe by accepting proposals to avert war and cope with the economic depression as agreed upon by the Locarno treaty signatories.

The agreement was published as a government white paper and described to the house of commons by Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

Mutual Sacrifices Urged

His appeal for German cooperation followed a foreign office conference with Joachim von Ribbentrop, Chancellor. Adolf Hitler's diplomatic agent.

Ribbentrop told Eden Germany is not able to accept any proposals imposing unilateral conditions on the reich. Eden stressed that mutual sacrifices are necessary to make possible a solution of the European crisis.

Not An Ultimatum

Eden assured the German delegate, who later sat with the League of Nations council in private sessions at St. James palace, that the Locarno proposals do not represent an ultimatum nor a pact Germany is requested to sign on the dotted line. They denote simply an offer for Germany's consideration, he said. They are designed to settle the present European diplomatic conflict and lead to a new deal in Europe.

Describing the agreement in the house of commons Eden confirmed that the Locarno signatories proposed a world economic and disarmament conference.

CLERK CANDIDATE ISSUES STATEMENT

James Ezell, republican candidate for county clerk, has issued a statement setting forth, in brief, his qualifications. It follows.

"In announcing by candidacy for the republican nomination for County Clerk I point first to the fact that I have been identified with Klamath county for over twenty-five years. I raised my family here, have owned considerable property here and have paid a very considerable sum of money in taxes toward the support of local government.

I served this district as a member of the state legislature and also served the Klamath Irrigation District as a director. These facts, though they do not imply any special qualifications as clerk, do have some bearing upon the subject. There are certain duties connected with the clerk's office that make a comprehensive knowledge of Klamath county conditions extremely valuable.

"However, I do possess other special qualifications which I shall touch upon briefly at this time, but upon which I shall enlarge as the campaign progresses. I refer first to the fact that I am a graduate accountant and to the further fact that I have had certain legal training both of which will be of particular value to me in grasping the details of the routine work of the office. This special knowledge will enable me to set for the office certain definite, high standards of performance; but— and this is also important from the public standpoint—I shall never become so inflated with a sense of my own importance that I shall forget my duty to the public in the matter of service. Courteousness and helpfulness to every individual caller at the clerk's office will be my aim."

COMPLEX SOIL CONSERVATION PLAN STARTED

subsidies—"soil building" and "soil conserving payments."

The soil building payments will be made for planting soil building crops on commercial crop land in 1936 and for approved soil building practices on crop land or pasture.

The rate of this payment will be based on the recommendation of state committees, but will not be more than $1 an acre. (An exception is made for small producers who may qualify for payments up to $10).

The soil conserving payment is to be made at a specified rate for shifting from soil depleting to soil conserving or soil building crops for 1936.

If a farmer is to receive a subsidy, his acreage of soil conserving or building crops must be equal to 20 per cent of the farm's soil depleting base, or equal to the maximum limit set for diversion.
