Safety Driver

The blast of a horn—the grind of brakes—the screech of rubber as it grips cement—and sudden death! This scene, all too common on highways and city streets today will be duplicated up to the very last part here next Monday, April 6, it was announced today by J. P. Barr, Montgomery Ward store manager, who told of a safety show the company is sponsoring and which is free to the public. The show will be staged at Main street, between 3rd and 4th.

Gus Schrader and Lew Brown, famous racing drivers, will give a demonstration on how to drive and how not to drive, showing the danger of taking chances at the wheel. Jack Story, nationally known announcer, will describe the show to onlookers over the amplifying system.

The Montgomery Ward Safety Show will provide thrills and instruction in good driving for the spectators. Each hair-breath escape will teach a lesson. Each will be followed by a demonstration of the correct driving procedure which the situation calls for. The running account of the show which Story will relate over the loud speakers will be told as only Story can tell it—packed with drama, suspense and significant information.

Prominent among the stunts will be a dramatic demonstration of "tunnel vision" or the inability to see from the corners of the eyes, and a demonstration of the effects of glare at night.
