SCHOOL WILL SHOW COOKING METHODS
Modern methods of cooking with the pressure cooker, which is an outstanding time and money saver, will be the subject of discussion and instruction at the Montgomery Ward cooking school to be held at the Ward store here on June first to sixth at 2:00 p. m. each day. The school was announced today by R. R. Proebstel, store manager, who extended an invitation to the public. Admission is free.

"Due to scientific advance which has produced modern methods of cooking under pressure, a number of important factors have entered into the science and fine art of cooking," said Proebstel in commenting on the school. "It is now possible to cook an entire meal in from 10 to 30 minutes and to produce tender, delicious dishes from cheaper cuts of meat because of the pressure cooking method. This school has been organized by Montgomery Ward to provide the very latest information on the subject to housewives and all who are interested."

At the school a well known authority on pressure cooking will not only discuss these new developments in the art of cooking but will give demonstrations showing just how such time-saving money-saving cooking can be done. He will discuss the subject thoroughly and an opportunity will be given for open discussion and questions.
