Road Struggle Prospects

THE editor of the Medford News, who is a legislator, advises editorially that "legislation will be passed at the next session of the legislature that will affect our highway system and program for the next five years—and perhaps longer."

He suggests that the Pacific highway association and the Redwoods highway group get busy and interview every legislator prospect from Salem south, on their attitude toward highway allocations and other problems. Quoting further:

It will take the combined forces of Eastern, Southern and Western Oregon to preserve the state's highway funds for the Pacific highway and the Eastern Oregon highways. Southern Oregon, and the Pacific highway counties, shouldn't be left out in the rain.

This is quoted here, that Klamath and Lake county people may be appraised of what is being said elsewhere about the highway situation and the prospects of forthcoming struggle.

Klamath and Lake, the Oregon counties in whose welfare this newspaper is primarily interested, should be prepared for whatever emergencies may arise, in the legislature or elsewhere, in connection with the highway situation. They should be ready to fight any program that will deny these big and rapidly developing counties their rightful share of highway funds.

Folly of Crime

A QUICK demonstration of the folly of crime came to the Keno kidnapers.

Two of them stood dejectedly before Circuit Judge Edward B. Ashurst Tuesday afternoon. They were that you would call "punk kids." There was every evidence that they had learned with a shock that the crime they had committed is regarded as one of the most serious on the Oregon statute books, and carries a penalty that runs as high as a life term in the state penitentiary.

There was no alternative but to give these youths ten years each in the state prison. Judge Ashurst obviously regretted the necessity, for the prisoners before him were young, they had no previous record of crime, and there was nothing of the "hardened" type about them.

One wonders if the lesson will stay with the young prisoners until that day when they are released from prison. Certainly it ought to impress others who may think that it's easy to get away with crime. Let them keep in mind the jolt that was handed the Keno kidnapers who "didn't realize what they were doing."

So wild and enthusiastic was the Hoover demonstration in Cleveland Wednesday night that some observers believed the former president could have won the nomination right there if he had so desired. But he gave no indication of wanting it that way, nor of attempting to influence the nomination, one way or the other. It was, at any rate, a triumph for the man who was the victim when the nation decided it had to have a scapegoat.

Much has been said in this column about the need of the underpass on Main street. Something might also be said about fixing up the crossing as it now stands. It's certainly not a good one, considering the heavy travel at that point. Bumping and bouncing are the rule as you drive across the tracks at this crossing.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS
The Inside Story From The Capital
By PAUL MALLON

CLEVELAND, June 11.—Delicate preparations were made for Mr. Hoover's appearance before this convention. The convention leaders wanted him there. They also need him in their coming campaign. They think they cannot win without him.

But they want him in both places as an elder statesman—and not as a candidate.

That is why they sent a man out to see him some time back to sound him out. Hoover soon caught the unspoken question in his caller's mind, put a friendly hand on his arm and said substantially this: "You don't need to worry about me. Don't let any stampee for me occur in that convention."

SOFT PEDAL
A few hours before Mr. Hoover's appearance, one of those deep rumors was spread through the convention. It undoubtedly originated in the alcoholic inspiration of a delegate, the source from which most convention rumors fly.

This one was a whisper that Landon was not to be nominated. "Watch the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio delegations." No names were mentioned, but these three delegations were supposed to be prepared to start a Hoover stampee.

The Landon people took steps to stamp out that one right away. Word was passed down the line to loyal delegates to give Hoover a big hand, but not too big.

BARGAINING
The inner trouble of this convention is the same as all of them, only worse. Everybody with one or more votes has been trying to cheat as much of a deal for them as he can.

Blunt ex-Senator David Reed (he was so frank that he talked himself out of his seat in the senate) let that black cat out of the bag in a typical Reed speech to the Pennsylvania delegation some time back. Mr. Reed told the Keystoneers they should not let anyone know how they stood, because other delegations did, and those delegations failed to get anything in return for their votes.

Actually his quotes were: "I think we should keep our thoughts to ourselves. One or two delegations, on impulse, have taken a poll and are now utterly neglected in Cleveland."

Note—Twenty-four hours later the Pennsylvania delegates insisted on a poll and showed 66 per cent for Landon.

WHEELING
And to show you the absurd lengths to which the bargaining instinct is sometimes carried, listen to this one:

The most galling personal grievance which Senator Borah has had against Landon concerns Walter Brown, the now ousted

SIDE GLANCES—by George Clark

Ohio committeeman. Personally, Borah attributes most of his Ohio troubles to Brown. If it had not been for Brown, the Idahoan believes he would have far more than five delegates from Ohio.

So, when Brown was set up for re-election here, the Borah delegates had a good chance to get even by casting all their votes against him. But did they? They did not. The balloting was secret and the votes were later torn up, but you may take it from an excellent authority that four of the Borah delegates voted for Brown.

The reason is said to be that they figured he might get them some Borah votes out of the delegation on the floor of the convention.

Politics is a funny business.

PROMOTION
A non-political business executive looked out over this republican convention the second night and could contain himself no longer. He asked with amazement: "Why do they have conventions? It seems to be an archaic and silly way to choose presidents of the United States. It is not efficient. It is not modern."

The inside answer is they do not hold conventions solely to choose a presidential nominee, but to promote ballyhoo for their ideals. This will be more obvious at Philadelphia in a few days hence than it is here. There is not even a good excuse for getting democratic delegates in from all over the country to go through the motions of re-nominating President Roosevelt, except the valid one of ballyhooing his political stand.

The free newspaper and radio space which the republicans have received in a few days here is more than they were able to get from months of carefully planned publicity.

LOST NAME
One name you seldom hear mentioned here is that of Lowden. The popular Illinois farmer was the center of advance gossip concerning first and second places on the ticket.

What seems to have stopped it is a personal report which has been spread through the convention by two Illinois delegates who recently went to see Mr. Lowden. As they relate it, his position is this:

He is feeling fine, but he has a few pains now and then which remind him of his 70-odd years. He likes Landon and is afraid that, if he accepted either place on the ticket, he would have endless lines of delegations outside his door, that he would have to go out on the stump, that he might be able to stand it, but does not want to.

NOTES
There are plenty of smoke-filled rooms out here, but all which have been investigated so far contained little except smoke.

This is the first convention since the prohibition protest has been dropped, but it seems to have brought no noticeable increase or decrease in inebriation. The delegates got the blame for whatever there is, but the fact seems to be that this primary business of all conventions is excessively enjoyed mainly by hangers-on.

The republican troubles with the loud speakers in convention hall may be blamed on Harry Hopkins. His PWA workers installed them.

Their names will not be called in convention hall, but there are several sharp Roosevelt observers here. One has already wired back to Washington a suggestion that the democrats take up the "Three Long Years" slogan by comparing three long years of Hoover with three long years of Roosevelt. You may hear it in the democratic keynote.

It may not be true, but they say that Mr. Hoover invited his friend, Supreme Court Justice Stone, up to his Maryland fishing lodge, shortly after Stone rendered a minority opinion upholding the new deal position on the Guffey bill. A Hoover secretary told the former president as they were all wading out in the stream: "Take Mr. Stone out in the middle and teach him something about fishing." Hoover barked back: "I'll take him out in the middle and teach him something about law."

Nobody has noticed it, but Chairman Bert Snell has a patch in the seat of his white trousers. That may make him a vice-presidential possibility, if the news gets around.

Merrill News
MERRILL, Ore.—Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Barkhurst announce the birth of a daughter, Sunday, June 7, at the Merrill hospital. The little girl who weighed 7 pounds, 2 ounces, has been named Darlene Dee.

The reclamation service and the army sponsored an outing for 125 men of the Camp Klamath civilian conservation corps to Crater lake last Friday, the trip being made on five trucks with Lieutenant Hanson, Mr. Bryson and Thomas Welch, educational advisor, in charge. Those going to the lake were escorted on observation trips to places of interest by Howard Crawford, park ranger.

M. Loomis of Camp Klamath has returned from Corvallis, where he spent a leave of absence in attendance at the graduation of his daughter, from a Corvallis high school. The young lady returned here with her father and will make her home near Merrill during the summer months.

In Greenland, until the white man came, Eskimos depended on meteors to furnish them with iron for making tools.

Cold tea is said to be a much more effective dressing for serious burns than any kind of oil.

Diver to Examine Hull of Freighter

ASTORIA, Ore., June 11 (UP)—Bruce Temple, former deep sea diver for the U. S. navy, said Wednesday night he will attempt the hazardous feat of entering the hull of the sunken freighter Iowa on wave-lashed Peacock Spit late this month.

Twenty bodies of the crew of 34 lost when the Iowa struck last winter are still missing and some of them are believed imprisoned in the hull.

Heavy surf booms over the wreck constantly. The coast guard power boat Triumph will stand by to aid Temple when he goes down.

Ten Years Ago In Klamath

A LARGE forest fire located between Rocky Point and Rock Creek in the Crater National forest on the west side of Klamath lake was burning and out of control this afternoon. Fire fighters were fighting the blaze.

Although two skeletons found on the lower edge of Klamath lake bear an abandoned home-stead site evidence of a 10-11 play, it is likely that the supposed murders were committed 25 years ago.

Rumors that the murders were committed 10 years ago by a murderer now serving a life term at the state penitentiary are believed to be erroneous.

Small boys are believed partially to blame for a number of grain fires which have kept the fire department on the run since
