NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS
 The Inside Story From The Capital

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—A lot of people have been wondering and talking about what President Roosevelt's reform attitude may be if he is re-elected.

A competent White House spokesman here, who knows as much about it as anyone, which is probably not much, has this interesting view:

For the next two years, the president's main problem would be to put the country on a firmer basis, by reducing expenditures and making better progress toward balancing the budget. If business continues to improve and he succeeds in getting his financial affairs into line in the first half of his second term, then he might be expected to devote the second half to developing some of his further reform theories.

By that time, the complexion of the supreme court may have been altered by a higher court. Note—The outcome of the congressional election will be a determining factor in the president's course. If the election is close, the republicans will gain important house strength regardless of whether their candidate wins.

PORESIGHT
 Chairman Jim Farley has been seen going in and out of the top advertising agencies in New York lately—and presumably not on campaign business.

In the trade, they say the super-political salesman is looking for a personal post-election business connection in advertising, whether Mr. Roosevelt wins or loses. There is some talk that he might establish an agency himself. He has contacts which should enable him to pick up some good accounts, although he could not qualify as a copy writer unless he took Charley Michelson with him.

In that business or any other, Mr. Farley could be chairman of as many political committees as he wants. If he returns to the postmaster generalship, it will mean only $12,000 a year, which is hardly enough to keep the wolf away from the footman.

PROMOTION
 War appears to be just around the next corner when staid England considers an appropriation to give every citizen a gas mask, but appearances are sometimes deceptive.

Certain authorities here became interested when they saw pictures of English dogs wearing gas masks in the photo sections. They became aroused when they noted news items about a bill just introduced in parliament to provide each Englishman with similar protection.

What they found, on inside investigation, however, is that these dramatizations were probably inspired by purposes other than immediate protection. The British is carrying a tremendously increased budget for the navy and army. There is no more realistic way to make the average taxpayer appreciate the necessities of national defense than to talk about giving him a gas mask.

Note—Warfare experts say the idea of a gas mask for each citizen is somewhat silly anyway, as no gas has yet been discovered which could be used effectively against large masses of the population. Existing aerial gases spread too fast and deteriorate too fast to be of any important use against whole cities or towns.

A Russian aviator, after flying within 450 miles of the north pole, reported that in his opinion, ice floes provide adequate landing fields in the polar region.

Foolhardiness at Lake

FOOLHARDINESS seems to run unusually high among Crater lake park visitors this year. This week two more tourists attempted the descent of the Crater wall, this time under Garfield peak, and had to be rescued by park rangers from the lake shore, where they were marooned.

The tragedy of the Virginia tourist, who lost his life in an attempt to climb down the precipitous walls of the lake, apparently wasn't lesson enough. At least twice since, there have been escapades of a similar nature.

People who climb around the crater walls aren't merely risking their own lives. When something happens to them, somebody has to rescue them or their bodies from dangerous places. The rangers who recovered the body of the young Virginia tourist were in the greatest danger.

Courteous warnings and plainly worded signs apparently are not enough, if foolish people are to be kept off the hazardous crater walls. The park service is justified in its decision to make it an arrestable offense for any person to expose himself to danger. The trouble is that it isn't only his neck that is at stake.

Hard Fighter Coming

COMING to Oregon next week is John Hamilton, the republican national chairman. Art Prialux and his cohorts can expect a big crowd out to see the red-headed, dynamic young man who put the Landon candidacy way out ahead of the field before the national convention, and now is hard at work directing Landon's battle with Roosevelt for the presidency.

Hamilton was born in Iowa 44 years ago. He went to Kansas in 1898. He took his law degree from Northwestern in 1916, served in the 23rd machine gun battalion in the world war. He served successively as assistant state attorney, probate judge of Shawnee county, a member of the Kansas legislature, speaker of the house of representatives, chairman of the state republican central committee, national committeeman, and general counsel of the republican national committee. When Landon was nominated, the republicans did the only sensible thing and put Hamilton at the head of the party forces.

Hamilton is a fighter. He is probably the best man the republicans could find to battle with the politically shrewd Jim Farley. He has already showed himself capable of taking care of himself in sparring with Big Jim. He has surrounded himself with an executive committee infused with young blood. John Hamilton is a chief reason why the campaign this year is going to be interesting to watch.

TRAGEDY ended a vacation trip for a motoring party from Portland at 4:30 p. m. yesterday, when William Lee Clinton, 62, was killed in an automobile accident on the Dalles-California highway one mile south of Sand Creek service station, 55 miles north of Klamath Falls. A large spike which pierced a rear tire and caused a blowout was responsible for the accident.

William Foley, 53, dump boss for the Marsh Construction company, was instantly killed at 10 o'clock this morning when a heavy truck backing down a narrow passageway knocked him down and crushed his head.

Though all fires in this district, including the mammoth blaze on Sugar Pine mountains, were listed under control today, they were so only in the sense that a tiger may be said to be tamed, according to Jack F. Kimball, head of the Klamath Forest Protective association.

Dangerous areas have been reduced and men were being returned to Klamath Falls at noon today.

Flying now is taught in Russia on a common see-saw, the would-be pilots maintaining their balance by means of a specially constructed control stick.
