

Fall Gives Inspiration to Renewed Activity in Social and Club Life

THE pulse of social and club activity gathered speed rapidly in the past week, and dates have been set for the opening meetings of many of the important organizations of the city for early in September.

Weddings and betrothal announcements still hold the limelight, however, for real interest in local society. Late summer and early fall weddings have been plentiful since June, the traditional month of marriages, and the late weddings have been of particular interest in the city.

With perfect weather holding, golf is coming into its own again, and fall tournaments have been announced for the women of the Klamath and Country club. Duplicate bridge will be played in the city.

The double-breasted fall coat is in vogue. The camel's hair in Spanish winds has padded shoulders to give the wide shouldered effect that will be the hit of a thousand campuses this autumn. The smart front panel is inset with pockets.

After the afternoon at the country club following golf.

Country homes are still popular, and weekend parties at mountain cabins are still among the important social events, and will be, until Indian summer is over, and fall winds and rain chase everyone indoors for more staid amusements throughout the winter season.

When girls are peddling lavender, And English muffin men And organ grinders march the streets, I'll fall in love again.

A handsome lad whose eyes are blue Will suddenly look down At me from out the twilight fog That wraps up London town.

"Where are you going, my pretty maid? To Piccadilly Square?" He'll ask. How could he ever know That I have trailed him there?

"It's nice to see you looking well." The lad will say to me. Then we'll have scenes and maritalade, And lots of cups of tea.

Perhaps when girls with lavender And English muffin men Are walking up and down the streets, He'll fall in love again! —When Girls Are Peddling Lavender. —Helen Weishamer.

Balanced Bouquets To be sure that flowers are arranged gracefully, draw an imaginary line through the center of the bouquet. The mass on each side of the line should be equal that on the other side. One side may be higher than the other but the bouquet should look as though there were an equal number of flowers on both sides.

Bride's Initial Problem When a bride is choosing a monogram for her silverware she may use the initials of her maiden name or those of her own first and last names with the bridegroom's last initial added. An old custom, recently revived, is to use a large initial of the bridegroom's family and place above it smaller initials of her first and last names, joined by a small plus sign.
