ASTHMA

ASTHMA is one of the allergic diseases, caused from a sensitivity of the bronchial membranes to pollen, animal effluvia or protein. The tendency is INHERENT and the disease is not contagious. While rarely fatal, Asthma is most distressing, inconvenient and exhausting, and the attacks place an undue strain on the heart and nervous system.

Asthmatic patients' major difficulty is EXHALING. The lining of the bronchial system has become irritated, and nature is trying to clear the air-passages of accumulated mucus. When the bronchial tubes and air-cells become congested, the one passage for air to the lower part of the lungs must be cleared, hence the spasmodic action of the tubes designated as ASTHMA. Sometimes an enlarged thymus gland, tumors that press on the windpipe, or a bad heart cause symptoms that are mistaken for Asthma. In children, especially, ASTHMATIC attacks are often mistaken for croup or bronchial pneumonia.

Specialists and authorities on Asthma and the allied allergic diseases (hay fever, eczema, hives, migrant, and mucous colitis) advise locating the CAUSE of sensitivity, and treatment for immunization, and less time and expense on palliative relief.
