

TAYLOR COMES OUT FOR THIRD TERM ATTEMPT

George P. Taylor announced Saturday that he would run for re-election to the county treasurer's office he now holds. Taylor's second term will expire at the end of this year.

He is a candidate for the republican nomination at the primary. If his experience of four years ago is returned to him will also receive the democratic nomination. He was re-elected to the office in 1932 without opposition.

His statement follows:

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Treasurer of Klamath county, to succeed myself at the expiration of this my second term.

My continued effort has been in accordance with my pledge given in 1932, that I would "conduct the office in the best interests of Klamath county as a whole, and give every person the same courtesy and service." For the benefit of those who have become residents and voters in more recent years, I am outlining some of the important accomplishments and policies.

The practice of paying warrants for the current expense, county road, and county school district funds by means of floating overdrafts has been continued, providing cash payments for these funds, excepting for short periods in the county road fund. Large savings in interest have been realized over many years by this means.

In the 1939 budget an item was requested and provided in the amount of $10,000 over the condition of floating overdraft in the current expense fund, which when repeated two more years, will provide a self-sustaining basis to the end of each year.

The total cash turnover of my office in the seven years is as follows: Cash on hand January 1, 1933, $441,034.64; receipts $14,410,176.68; disbursements $14,593,173.82; cash on hand December 31, 1939, $258,037.50.

If any other matter has received more particular attention by me, it has been the bonded debt of Klamath county, which was $1,598,704 at the beginning of 1933, now very drastically reduced to $708,700 which is the combined road bond and general warrant bond debt. The reductions by years have been 1937, $215,000; 1938, $194,704; 1939, $215,000, the latter figure being the largest reduction in one year in the history of Klamath county, and the passing of a financial crisis, with the way clear for the culmination of a nine-year plan set up by your present county treasurer in 1933, to levy $160,000 for road bond principal and interest each year. The levy for 1933 interest was $81,400 and for 1940 only $30,000. It is my sincere expectation that the levy to be made in the budget next October for 1941 debt requirement will be reduced to $60,000. This will mean approximately a two mill reduction of the levy in this one item, or $2.00 less taxes on each $1000 assessed valuation. Next year the budget for debt requirement can be reduced about $40,000 additional. Klamath county will be practically debt free at the end of 1941, when the outstanding road bonds will amount to $328,000, and maturing over a period of fourteen years, with approximately $100,000 debt levy collectible in delinquent taxes.

Finally to every citizen and voter I wish to say that if you consider my pledge given in 1932 and renewed in 1936 has been faithfully kept, and are satisfied, I solicit most earnestly your continued support and confidence.

GEORGE P. TAYLOR.

STATE RITES FOR SENATOR BORAH SLATED

ing the way for his own appointment to the vacancy by Lieutenant-Governor Donald Whitehead. Bottolfo, praising Borah, said he would have no comment on a successor until after the funeral.

There also was discussion in political circles of the possibility that Mrs. Borah might be named to fill her husband's seat until this year's November election.

Several others also were mentioned, including Donald A. Callahan, republican, defeated by Senator D. Worth Clark, democrat, in 1938; State Senator Thomas Booth and Ezra Whitte, republican national committeeman.

The gray-haired senator, called for years "The Lion of Idaho," while other senators worked for days to line up support before introducing a bill, he never consulted his colleagues before proposing a measure. Few of his major legislative suggestions ever were enacted.

Borah carried Mary McConnell, a daughter of a former Idaho governor, when he was 30. She cried when death came, but was able to converse with close friends who came to express their sorrow.

Those who came—Senator McNary (R-Ore.), the minority leader, Senator Clark (D-Ida.) and Earle Venable, secretary of the republican house campaign committee—kissed Mrs. Borah on the cheek.

Although Borah's death had been anticipated, London newspapers stopped their presses to carry the news of his passing. The Daily Express said Borah would be remembered as "a bitter critic of Britain" but added that "we should not forget that all Americans shared his creed: America first."

The Daily Mail commented that Borah was better known to the average Briton than any other American except the president.

Borah frequently was mentioned for president, and always commanded substantial popular support. He announced as a presidential candidate in 1936 but walked out of the republican convention at Cleveland because he was displeased that a strong anti-monopoly plank had not been written into the platform.

The Idahoan was a member of the existing committee studying monopoly, but often expressed disappointment that more stringent anti-monopoly laws had not been written onto the statute books.

Borah advocated a farm relief system under which surplus commodities would be given the poor—a program which now is being tried on a modified scale.

"It is a stigma on the congress," Borah said, "that we should have men and women and children without food, without clothes, and that we should fail to use our surpluses to supply them."

Borah was looked upon as a top-notch constitutional authority and other senators frequently sought his views on the constitutionality of their bills.

He joined with southern senators in their successful filibuster against the anti-lynching bill two years ago because he believed the measure unconstitutional.

Two charged with disorderly conduct and one with being drunk appeared before Judge Cook on Saturday.

MAN ARRESTED ON BURGLARY CHARGES HERE

Arthur Cruson, about 56, is held in the county jail pending the outcome of burglary charges filed against him after an alleged break-in at a farm house.

According to state police, Cruson was arrested on a complaint by Bob Cheyne, who lives on O'Connor's lane.

Cheyne told the officers that he returned home unexpectedly the other evening. An old car was parked in front of his place with the lights off.

As he started to the house, a man came from behind the building, and told Cheyne he wanted some water because his car was hot. Cheyne told him to go ahead and get the water, but the visitor instead got into the car and drove away.

Cheyne, according to the story, then went into the house and found two suitcases, removed from their accustomed places and packed with personal possessions from the Cheyne household.

Cheyne then got into his car and pursued the other machine. He caught up with it and talked to the driver. Later he reported to officers, who arrested Cruson as the alleged burglar.
