MAYOR CONTINUES FEUD WITH BRIDGES

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 23 (AP)—Mayor Angelo Rossi continued his feud with Henry Bridges today, denouncing the California CIO leader in his annual message to the San Francisco board of supervisors as "an alien" with a philosophy "based on bad faith." Bridges made no immediate comment.

"I am doing Mr. Bridges no injustice when I declare his philosophy is based on bad faith," the mayor said in his message. "Violations of contracts executed by Mr. Bridges," the mayor continued, "have been innumerable. He personally has observed many times he will observe solemn contracts only so long as they are to his advantage."

TRAINING AT CCC CAMP GETS PRAISE

One of the most graphic illustrations of the possibilities of vocational and job training in CCC camps was demonstrated by members of the carpentry crew of Camp Lava Beds.

Foreman Thomas Toobig termed the interior finishing by Robert Knapp, Russell Walker and Walter Konzik as that of a professional. All molding and other millwork used was made in the carpentry shop by crew members. Material used was Oregon cedar. Work project is that of building an addition on the ranger station building at the Indian Wells ranger station.

The acting custodian of the Lava Beds national monument, Don C. Fisher, pointed out that in the field of stone masonry, an excellent job of construction and the training of men is being done by Clarence C. McNeely. Outstanding pupil learning this occupation of stone masonry is enrollee Francis P. Malott.

One of the major work projects being pushed to completion is the eight and one half miles long electric power lines. This construction afforded the opportunity to train five enrollees as climbers.

Remaining to be done on this 11,000 volts three strand wire line is the addition of more power and telephone transpositions, wiring the residence of the acting custodian, and several minor jobs.

A pump operated by means of a large electric motor has been installed in connection with the 700-foot-deep well located at the ranger station.

The pipeline ditch connecting the 27,000 gallons reservoir atop Crescent butte with the pump and buildings at the Indian Wells ranger station is being pushed toward completion. Most difficult obstacle to overcome is the solid lava rock through which the ditch must be dug. Four inch pipe mains will be laid; one inch feeder pipes will connect the water mains with the water outlets.

Foreman Albert Burby and Leader Andy Ferency are in charge of the project.

In order to facilitate inspection of the mains and feeders, all ditches will be filled in with volcanic cinders.

A new foreman has just been assigned to Camp Lava Beds. His name is Heywood Brooks, a co-worker of Foreman Thomas Toobig when the latter was at Camp Chabot, San Leandro, Calif.

The men and officials of Camp Lava Beds were honored by the visit of several high ranking supervisory officials.

Mr. L. M. Watkins, national park service inspector, visited the camp on January 13. Major Paul H. Weiland, F. A. district inspector of Medford CCC district, inspected Camp Lava Beds on January 11.

HIGH SCHOOL

News Notes and Comment
By Bill Ganong

As there will be no Pelican game Saturday night, plans are being made for a game between the Wildcats and the Keno high school.

In a previous game the Keno team took a last quarter win over the Cats after three quarters of nip and tuck playing.

In their game with Butte Valley last Friday night, the sophomores hit a new peak in playing form, and now feel that they will be able to emerge victorious in a scramble with the green and white team. The Cats will be playing on the home court, and this will be an additional advantage.

The boys' alliance in accordance with a policy outlined by President Dick Igi at the beginning of the year placed $10 with the Dean of boys office to buy books for and to aid boys who are having a hard time financially staying in school. If the alliance is able to work up a surplus in their treasury there will probably be more contributions in the future.

The alliance magazine selling campaign got under way Monday afternoon when order blanks were distributed to potential salesmen and head salesmen were appointed in various home rooms. The campaign, which will take the form of a high pressure contest, will last two weeks and the winning home room will be awarded with ice cream.

Part of the money raised will go to the baseball team to help purchase equipment, and the rest will be placed in the treasury.

Controversy Develops Over Bond Issue at Shasta Dam

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Jan. 23 (UP)—A sharp controversy developed Monday between opponents and proponents of a proposal to issue $50,000,000 in bonds to pay for a system for distribution of power generated at Shasta dam, chief unit of the central valley water project.

Highlight of the public hearing on the plan was the appearance of Thomas M. Carlson, Richmond attorney and director of the central valley project association, who denied the Pacific Gas and Electric company had paid him "one five cent piece" to oppose project legislation.

Carlson also denied telling a senate irrigation committee he was on the PG&E payroll, but he said it had been known generally for years he received $50 monthly from the power company for handling condemnation suits in his territory.

Director of Public Works Frank W. Clark, Carlson and Clarence Breuner, president of the association, argued over the opposition to legislation sought by Gov. Culbert Olson to set up a power distribution system.

In Washington, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes said the state of California must be ready to market power generated at Shasta dam and other units of the central valley project to or through public utility districts if it wished to take full advantage of the facilities of the project.

Carlson opposed this idea. He contended none of the $170,000,000 voted by the people in 1923 for the project should be disturbed until the federal government completes the project. He said $77,000,000 in work was underway, only $40,000,000 had been appropriated, and "the government might quit anytime."

"The $170,000,000 should be kept for reserve but Clark says take it and put the state in the power business. Finish the project and then handle power or water or both separately."

Clark urged the distribution proposal be placed in the special session of the legislature starting next Monday.

Breuner accused the Olson administration of "confusing the issues on the proposed legislation." He said he opposed "diversion of $50,000,000 from the original $170,000,000 when it is not certain the federal government will finish the project."

At the conclusion of the hearing scores of farmers represented by the "citizens central valley project committee," chiefly comprised of members of the California state project, endorsed proposed project legislation.

Aligned in support of the Olson administration's proposal were George Selimyer, master of the California grange; State Senator J. C. Garrison of Stockton and Clark. The opposition was headed by Breuner, Carlson and Roy M. Pike, manager of the El Soto farms, Stanislaus county.

Replying to Carlson's statement concerning the monthly retainer he received from PG&E, Garrison said it was "human nature" for a man to be prejudiced if he had money in his pockets from a utility.

Garrison said the proposed amendment would not change the central valley water project act but would "unfreeze" $5,000,000 so PG&E would not be the only bidder for Shasta dam power at a "cheap bid."

"We want the state to be in a position to bid on what the power is worth, then establish the project to sell water at lower prices," Garrison said.

State Senator Jack Metzger of Red Bluff opposed diversion of money and said it was not a political issue.

YOUTH OUTWITS "CITY SLICKER" IN RABBIT DEAL

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 23 (UP)—Eighteen-year-old Roy Mishler tended his rabbits at Coburg, Ore., in a happy frame of mind. He had outwitted a "city slicker" in Portland this weekend.

Police said the "slicker" was Charles Powers, possessor of a petty crimes record, who was lodged in the city jail on a vagrancy charge and on a "hold" order for the federal bureau of investigation.

Mishler had come to Portland to sell some rabbits. His business completed, he walked down the street with money jingling in his pocket. He met Powers, who represented himself as a forest service employee.

"He promised me a job driving a pack train," said Mishler, "and I thought that would be swell."

But the boy from the country became suspicious when he found there was a matter of "a filing fee, regulation forest service clothes and the price of a telegram to check references." His father works for the railroad, so he instinctively sought out a railroad detective.

Mishler met Powers at an appointed time, but he was accompanied by two city cops. Powers was jailed and Mishler was put on a train, homeward bound.

Among the New Books

At the City Library

By MRS. EMBERT ROSSUM

SO STANDS THE ROCK,

by M. Anne Downes. Vermont in the horse and buggy days forms the background of this novel. It is the story of Jessie Perkins, the descendant of many generations of New Englanders, a beautiful woman, but firm as the rock foundations of her native state, and of her marriage to the Scotch-Irish Angus, of mixed Scotch and Irish ancestry. This is a first novel, but it has maturity and mellowness of feeling. More than that, it has the unusual merit of being a thought-provoking book. It is a story of local color, but the characters and problems are universal. It is not a complex story, the marriage of the hard-headed realist with the gay, imaginative idealist is simple enough, until they start living together. There is no lapse in the variety of incidents, and the animation of the style. Not for an instant does the book ever grow dull. This is a book which in my opinion, should not be missed.

MAN OF GLORY: SIMON BOLIVAR, by Thomas Bourke (Pseud). This is a biography of the liberator and dictator of Columbia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru. To quote the author: "As well as interpreting the man himself, (he hoped also) in view of the dangers that threatened the principles of democracy throughout the world today, to bring the reader a clear conception of that sympathy toward dictators which has always been inherent in Latin Americans, and thus to warn him how very formidable that danger is in the countries south of us." This is a complicated enough task, but he has succeeded admirably. And although Mr. Bourke is not immune to the magnetism with which Simon Bolivar was so well provided, he has sternly tried to disentangle the personality of the man from his actual achievements. This life story of a remarkable individual will hold the interest and sympathy of all sorts of readers.

THE CONFIDENTIAL AGENT, by Graham Greene, Mr. D., a former professor of romance languages in an unnamed country, arrives in England as confidential agent for his war-weary country. His object is to buy coal. Violence, theft and love follow him all through his stay, and the last named is still with him on his homeward trip—his mission a failure. Mr. Greene manages suspense so well that he has you sitting on the edge of your chair. Furthermore, he gives the most improbable predicaments a semblance of plausibility. Of course, the story is pretty thin, and some of the characters are a bit stagey, but this is still the best high-brow thriller I've read in some time. Mr. Greene adds some rather brutal criticism of the English way of life which would appear to be his ruling motive as a serious novelist. But there are thrills and excitement aplenty, with the sense of being an eye witness to quietly conveyed. In short, pretty good.

BE ACTIVE AND ALIVE! LIVE A 100% LIFE!

ANEMIA

The healthy person must have the required number of red blood cells, each containing the proper amount of hemoglobin (iron and oxygen). If the blood-making machinery of the body, or presence in the blood of some destructive poison, results in a lack of red blood cells, in other words, anemia, there is a lack of hemoglobin in them. In other cases the blood analysis shows something vitally wrong with the blood-making machinery of the body, or presence in the blood of some destructive poison.

If you suspect Anemia consult your physician and follow his treatment. If you have some infection, such as bad teeth, tonsils or hemorrhoids, seek proper advice, because infection pouring into the blood is one source of Anemia.

Your Doctor may be able to help you overcome this "half-alive" state and again enjoy real health and a full, active life.
