MEMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATION

Since 1933

TRAFFIC has gained on our highways tremendously since 1933, the year tourist travel began to climb from depression lows.

That is graphically shown in figures on foreign car travel taken from the records of the California plant quarantine division.

California officials count foreign cars as machines from other states carrying persons who are making more than mere local trips. Here are the figures on four gateways of particular interest to the Midland empire:

	1933	1939	Gain
Alturas	3777	6487	2710
Malin	3630	5560	1930
Dorris	11,694	37,615	25,921
Hornbrook	36,334	54,763	18,429
	55,435	104,425	48,990

The showing made by the Weed-Klamath Falls highway (Dorris quarantine station) is particularly gratifying. Completion of the Willamette highway will bring still greater gains to the Dorris and Malin entrances.

What was foreseen for travel through here in the years civic work was being pressed for the Weed-Klamath and Willamette highways was not mere idle dreaming. It has been fully justified by the development of travel since 1933—and the future promises an even brighter picture.

Deer in the Field

WHAT the Klamath region has to offer the Sunday afternoon motorist in the way of intriguing glimpses of wildlife is demonstrated in the typical experience of a local party on a jaunt to the Lava Beds and Tionesta February 4.

On the west side Tulake road, a covey of fat mountain quail moved out of the way of the car. Ahead 50 yards a flock of pheasant hens flew across the road, and waited in the willows as the machine moved by. On the waters of Tule lake sump, thousands of ducks and geese were swimming about.

Returning from Tionesta along the Hatfield-Canby highway, the motorists stopped to watch 52 deer feeding in one of George Courtright's grain fields. Annoyed, the animals presented a moving picture of symmetry and grace by trotting out of the field and across the skyline.

There was nothing unusual for a Klamath traveler in any of these experiences. In fact, most of us have seen more wild birds and animals than that on similar trips through the same area.

But it all was indicative of the things of that nature that have been spared for us to enjoy, right in our own front yard, while millions of dwellers in the cities and the more thickly settled areas live a life-time without such experiences.

A movement is under way to establish an art center in Klamath Falls. If it succeeds we offer to send down an exhibit of Deschutes potatoes so that the public can see just what a good potato looks like—Bend Bulletin.

There's only one thing about the Deschutes spud that qualifies it as a work of art. The farther you get away from it, the better.

The Family Doctor

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN, Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

AMONG the thousands of drugs, serums, antitoxins, vaccines, vitamins and other preparations used in the prevention and treatment of disease, there are some which are so certain in their action, so positive in their effects, so valuable in their results, as to deserve the name of Magic Medical Bullets.

The term seems to have been coined first at the time Paul Ehrlich, distinguished German-Jewish investigator, discovered "606," later called salvarsan and arsphenamine. When he first discovered this drug, it was characterized by Latin phrase, "therapia sterilis magna"—the great sterilizing treatment—because it was believed that the injection of this drug into the blood would cause all germs to disappear from the blood and perhaps also from the body.

It did not take long for scientists to discover that such a claim was unwarranted. But the value of the treatment was unquestioned, and today salvarsan or arsphenamine is recognized to be one of medicine's most important Magic Medical Bullets.

From time to time, I have been asked to select 10 medical preparations which might be considered the outstanding discoveries in the treatment of disease. The choice is an extremely difficult one, because of the vast number of preparations that are available, and because one is limited to treatment rather than to prevention. There were great medical discoveries both for prevention and treatment before Ehrlich's famous announcement.

Perhaps, first on the list, chronologically, at least, would be the treatment of malaria with quinine; (2) use of digitalis in the treatment of heart disease; (3) ether and chloroform as anesthetics; (4) diphtheria antitoxin; (5) insulin for diabetes; (6) liver extract for pernicious anemia; (7) blood transfusion; (8) vitamin D for rickets; (9) nicotine acid for pellagra; (10) sulfanilamide and sulfa pyridine.

NEXT: Quinine in malaria.

WPA SEWING ROOM TO CHANGE SITES

Preparations are being made to move the WPA sewing room from its old location, 1855 Portland, to a new place at 219 East Main street, it was announced Friday at the WPA offices in the courthouse.

Selection of the new location, in a brick building formerly occupied by the Cascade Laundry, was made by WPA officials, the county court and by Miss Manche I. Langley of Eugene, director of WPA sewing projects.

The county will furnish property for the development of the new rooms, according to the county court.

Teacher Named As Suspect In Mother's Death

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Feb. 5 (UP)—Beatrice Cox, 35, sought for a week as a suspect in the slaying of her mother, Mrs. Clara Cox, 55, was found by police Saturday evening under a pile of bedclothes a few feet from the spot where her mother was slain last Saturday.

The daughter, a former school teacher, told police she had wandered in the rugged ravines near her mother's home for seven days without eating.

She returned to the death scene early today. Police discovered her when they made a routine check-up of the premises.

Detectives Charles Dobb and Wayne Macy, who found her, said she became hysterical when they lifted the blankets. She screamed and clawed at them, they said.

After she was taken to police headquarters, she told Detective Sergeant Ed Diekmann, head of the homicide squad, that she heard what she thought were burglars last Saturday night.

She said she went to a broom closet and got a rifle. "I went to my mother's room then," she said. "We got into an argument and wrestled. The gun went off."

"But I didn't shoot her! I didn't!" she cried.

After she saw her mother fall dead, she ran from the house and accidentally dropped a match in the garage. When the structure started to burn she fled, she said.

The slaying was discovered when firemen had put out the blaze.

FALSE ALARM

A large crowd was attracted to the J. J. Newberry store, 825 Main street, Saturday night after a girl passerby had turned in what police said was a false alarm on a burglary in the building. City officers who investigated said the girl apparently mistook members of the Newberry staff, who were at work in the store, for burglars.

Hoover Recalls Boing He Got at World Series Tilt

BY SID FEDER
NEW YORK, Feb. 5 (AP)—If you think you felt badly, Mr. Gus O. Baseball Fan, when you booed former President Herbert Hoover in the 1931 world series, take Mr. H's word for it, you weren't feeling anywhere near as low as he was that afternoon in Philadelphia.

Breaking a nine-year silence, the ex-president told the folks at the 17th annual dinner of the New York Baseball Writers' association last night just how it felt to receive a large load of the "Bronx Cheer." His remarks shared interest with the general theme of the writers' show, which took varied humorous and "ribbing" raps at:

(1)—The hoped-for breaking-up of the New York Yankees, so "the rest of us" can have a chance;
(2)—The efforts of Judge Kene-saw M. Landis to wipe out "cover-up" activities in the maneuvering of up-and-coming minor league players, such as prompted his recent edict declaring some 20 percent of the Detroit Tigers and affiliated clubs free agents; and,
(3)—The "Nap" Ernie Lombardi, Cincinnati catcher, took at home plate in last fall's world series.

The lampooning of these subjects, together with Hoover and the first public howl for Lou Gehrig since last July, drew the major "hands" from the 1938 who attended the writers' dinner.

It was Hoover's first public statement on how he felt, when as president, he stepped into his box in Shibe park during the Athletics-Cardinals series of 31, and was greeted with jeers. "You know," he explained, "there were a number of thirty people present with no patience for constitutional process."

"But when they greeted me with more than their usual delicacy when I entered the grandstand, I was really peeved, because I was probably the only man there who obeyed the law and had been thirsty for 11 years."

After a burlesque take-off on virtually every club in the major leagues, as well as some of the minor, the writers went from the ridiculous to the sublime to present Bucky Walters, Cincinnati pitcher, with a plaque as "the player of the year" and Ed Barrow, Yankees' president, with a trophy for "meritorious service" to baseball over a period of years.

PRACTICE OF FIRM IN TACOMA RAPPED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 (AP)—The federal trade commission Saturday pronounced certain activities of Pacific Forest Industries, Tacoma, Wash., violations of the export trade act and recommended the association adjust its business to conform with the law.

Certain contracts and by-laws which prohibit its members from selling to independent exporters, except through the association, are illegal, the commission said, and certain acts and practices in fixing prices and conditions of sale to independent exporters are in restraint of the export trade of such exporters.

The commission found such exporters to be "domestic competitors" of the association, within the meaning of the law.

Pacific Forest Industries, an Export Trade association organized in 1935, represents 15 Pacific Northwest Douglas fir plywood mills. These mills, the commission said, produce all or nearly all the Douglas fir plywood manufactured in this country.

The commission recommended: 1. The association should not, through its by-laws, contracts with members or associate members, or in any other way, prohibit members or associate members from selling plywood directly to American exporters.

2. Section XVI of the by-laws should be altered or rescinded so that members and associate members may accept and fill orders without reference to or approval by the association.

3. The association should not impose penalties, forfeitures or charges upon sales to American exporters for fix or prescribe prices, terms or conditions of sale, or take any other action "designed to prevent or restrict such sales."

4. The association should cease advertising in foreign countries it is the only export representative of Pacific Northwest plywood mills.

Baby Borrowed By Nurse But Hubby Objects

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 5 (AP)—Barbara Fay Purvis, a tiny baby who police thought was about "the cutest thing" they ever saw, was home with its parents today after being borrowed by a red-haired nurse who forgot who Barbara was or where she lived.

Mrs. Mary Miller had turned up at her home Friday night with the blue-eyed 11-month-old child under her arm much to the surprise of her husband, Cornelius. Miller smelled his wife's breath and, being unable to make heads or tails of her story, called police. Mrs. Miller was taken to police headquarters and booked for intoxication.

For a time today it looked as though police might have a problem on their hands for a long time. But Mrs. Miller said maybe if the officers would take her out through the residential section in the northeastern part of the city she would recognize Barbara's house. Police agreed, and the search began.

The police car, with Mrs. Miller in the front seat, passed a small, neat house. Mrs. Miller took one glance and shouted: "That's it."

It was.
