Liechtenstein Only Prince Charming Left in Europe

By CHARLES FOLTZ

VADUZ, Liechtenstein — (Correspondence of The Associated Press)—To whom it may concern:

Be advised there is still at least one prince charming in war-torn Europe.

He is Franz Josef II of Liechtenstein, handsome ruler of a happy little principality sandwiched between Switzerland and what was once Austria. Most of 10,213 subjects think he's wonderful and so do most of Europe's unmarried young princesses.

Franz Josef, now thirty three and a bachelor, is decidedly a potential princely catch for most any girl—and here's what makes him so.

He is no fly-by-night monarch seated on a shaky throne. His family originated in the 12th century and were free barons long before they began a long uninterrupted rule as Princes of Liechtenstein in 1608.

Despite its magnificent scenery, its handsome prince and its most tax-free peasantry there's little in Liechtenstein to make it worth while for a big power to grab it. Furthermore Germany and Switzerland, its only neighbors, have recognized Prince Franz Josef's little realm.

Nor is the prince one of Europe's penniless titles armed only with charm, a family tree and an eye for wealthy mates. He's the head of one of Europe's wealthiest families.

The great Liechtenstein palace in Vienna with one of the world's finest art collections is his. He still owns twenty-odd castles and great estates in old Austria, Bohemia and Germany proper.

He isn't a land-poor prince either, for most of his estates make money. He loses on Liechtenstein which pays him nothing.

In Liechtenstein he owns a castle that looks like it came right out of an artist's conception of what a medieval castle should look like—outside. Inside it has an elevator and modern plumbing.

There's little chance of Liechtenstein's prince being killed in battle either, for he's a peaceable prince and his little principality has no army. Forestry is his hobby.

Nor is the prince likely to acquire any gray hairs governing his subjects for, like England's king, he rules but he does not govern. Liechtenstein's elected parliament and premier does that.

Furthermore, if any girl gets Franz Josef and marries him in Liechtenstein the marriage is permanent, for there's no divorce in the little principality. Divorce is banned by constitution.

There have been many rumors of the prince's impending engagement or marriage, for the young ruler gets around. His name has frequently been linked with various unattached females of the Hapsburg clan, but so far nothing has happened.

Since the war began in western Europe Franz Josez, who speaks five languages including English, has settled down in his little principality instead of living in more cosmopolitan cities like Vienna, Paris and London. Still more recently he has moved from his modern hunting lodge on Liechtenstein's mountain top to the renovated castle on the mountain side.

The monarchy of Liechtenstein is hereditary through the male line. Liechtenstein's subjects, very proud of their handsome prince who gave each school child in the realm a Christmas gift of more than one dollar last year, hope he'll marry and start raising a family soon.
