

Now Start Old Clothes Treasure Hunt

By ALICIA HART

Whatever you hear and read to the contrary, it just isn't true that, come Easter, practically every woman in the country will dash out and buy a complete new wardrobe.

The majority of us will content ourselves with one new outfit and the hope that a dress or two will be forthcoming shortly after Easter. Meanwhile, we'll try to figure out what to do with leftovers from last summer and spring.

It's a great mistake, of course, to wait until spring actually arrives before getting last summer's clothes out of the attic and juggling the budget to allow for necessary alterations, dye jobs and the like.

Here's How on a Small Budget
Last summer's navy dress won't look like last summer's navy dress if it has been shortened to this year's length, taken in a trifle through the waistline and had its buttons changed or its lingerie collar replaced with a new, entirely different one.

The black silk suit you wore too weary in August may have fresh glamor for you if you get new blouses for it now instead of later on after you have worn it several times with old blouses.

It's no sin to wear a dress season after season, year after year, providing it fits perfectly. But any dress, old or new, isn't worth much to you if it sags and droops.

The truly chic woman whose budget is limited never has trouble deciding whether to buy one new dress or to take money equivalent to the price of it and pay for having her entire wardrobe gone over by a good tailor.

DELBERT MARCUS DIES IN ARIZONA

Delbert Ellis Marcus, son of Mrs. Mary Marcus of Klamath Falls and Fred Marcus of Medford, died February 15 at 6:30 a. m. in Phoenix, Ariz., according to word received here. He was 24 years 7 months and 12 days at the time of his death.

Mr. Marcus was buried in Phoenix, February 17. Funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Webster, pastor of the Four Square church. In addition to his father and mother, Mr. Marcus is survived by a sister, Helen Thomason of Bremerton, Wash.

MAN FOUND DEAD THURSDAY NIGHT

Erick Johnson, 57, was found dead in his bed Thursday night at 10:45 o'clock by Elmer Engstrom, according to the Earl Whitlock funeral home. Death was attributed to a heart ailment.

Johnson lived at 429 Commercial street. He was unemployed. It is thought he was a native of Sweden.
