

SOLICITATION CARDS POSTED BY BUREAU

Members of the Klamath Retail Trade Bureau received their "solicitation posters" at the regular monthly luncheon meeting held at the chamber of commerce Monday.

The posters are to be posted in a prominent place in the business houses, so they can be seen easily by solicitors for advertising and donations. The cards read:

"No solicitations will be entertained unless a permit card of authorization issued by the Klamath Retail Trade Bureau is presented. Your cooperation is respectfully requested, and application for the permit may be made at the office of the Klamath Retail Trade Bureau at 323 Main street."

Solicitors and the purpose for which they solicit are investigated by a secret committee composed of members of the bureau before a permit card is issued.

Northwesterners Feel Start Of Industrial Boom; Cheap Power Flows on New Lines

By FLOYD W. LANSDON
PORTLAND, March 19 (AP)—Pacific northwesterners are convinced they have a baby industrial boom in their laps.

Cheap public electric power is flowing over miles of high tension lines, and private utilities, fighting desperately against the advancement of public ownership, are lowering their rates almost daily.

And as the fight progresses, industrial concerns, attracted by cheap power, rich natural resources and excellent harbor facilities, are setting up plants. Others, potential factors in the anticipated boom, are talking about contracts with public power authorities.

The federal government's power "yardstick" experiment is being felt throughout the area.

A $30,000,000 network of cables is spreading slowly over the northwest, tapping consumer areas and interconnecting generators at Bonneville, at Grand Coulee dam, and in private systems.

A new type of business concern, a direct outgrowth of the "yardstick" search, is springing up throughout Oregon and Washington. This is the voter-created, public operated public utility district, which will distribute power from Bonneville and from Grand Coulee when generators there begin to turn, and also will distribute power purchased from private companies. They will set up their own generating plants, too, if the need arises.

All this before mighty Grand Coulee has turned out a watt of power and while Bonneville is generating but a fraction of the energy it will ultimately produce.

The huge transmission system now being built by the government will not only deliver

Two 230,000-volt lines will connect Bonneville and Grand Coulee, one stretching northward from the lower Columbia structure, touching the Tacoma and Seattle systems before swinging eastward across the Cascade mountains to Grand Coulee, and the other moving northeastward through central Washington.

Some 35 public utility districts have been established in Oregon and Washington, but opposition has been strong enough to kill at least 15 proposals in Oregon and several in Washington. Twenty-five districts have been established in Washington's 39 counties, 10 in Oregon.

Power from these two and future generating plants, but will interconnect all generators, public and private, in the northwest. Such a hook-up would be valuable for emergency use in wartime, and, its protagonists say, would find day-by-day use in the delivery of power from districts where maximum generation is possible to districts where, because of low water and other impediments, generation is less than the demand.

This year's elections will decide at least 15 proposals in Oregon and several in Washington, along with an initiative measure which would require approval of at least 50 per cent of the voters before public utility districts could issue bonds, incur other obligations, or acquire property through condemnation proceeds. This last, advocates of the "PUD" (public utility district) movement insist, likely would be an impassable barrier to operation.

POLK ATTORNEY OPENS CAMPAIGN

Bruce Spaulding, district attorney of Polk county, will be a candidate for the democratic nomination for Oregon's attorney-general in the May primary, he announced today.

Spaulding attained prominence throughout the state during his prosecution of seven so-called "labor racketeers," when seven terrorists to both labor and business, notably Al Rosser, were convicted of arson in Polk county, as a result of participating in the burning of a non-union mill. Rosser and associates are now serving long terms in the Oregon state penitentiary.

Spaulding is 34 years old, married and the father of two daughters, aged 6 and 3. His grandfather pioneered to Oregon in 1850 as a Methodist circuit rider, the Spaulding family settled in Salem. His father homesteaded in Hood River, organizing the Asbury Methodist church there. Bruce Spaulding was graduated from Willamette university, in both liberal arts and law. Admitted to the Oregon bar in 1930, he established residence in Dallas where he was associated with Oscar Hayter, well known Polk county lawyer, until his election as district attorney of that county.
