REPUTATION

By EARL WHITLOCK
Reputation is a thing won by deeds, not a good that answers the whistle of mere desire.
Into the reputation which this firm enjoys in the minds of the people of our city, go hundreds of recollections of kindly, comforting, considerate things done for bereaved friends.
Into that reputation go memories of beauty and dignity obtained at services under our care.
Into that reputation go thousands of little words of appreciation spoken by friend to friend over a long period of years.
These things are what build Reputation—and I believe I am not making too strong a statement when I say that our Reputation is probably the strongest guarantee of complete satisfaction that any patron could have.
