Fair Appropriation

A NUMBER of Oregon newspapers have harshly criticized the state emergency board for its refusal to appropriate $16,500 from emergency funds for conduct of an exhibit at the San Francisco fair. The unfavorable comment has been directed particularly at two eastern Oregon members of the board, Speaker Farland of the house of representatives, who lives at Condon, and Representative Semon of Klamath county, a member of the house ways and means committee. They voted against the appropriation.

One newspaper hurls the hated epithet "mossbacks" at the emergency board. That is a rather startling thing to be said about eastern Oregon legislators, who, in general, have appeared to have characteristics distinguishing them from mossbacks.

A. L. Lindbeck, writing from Salem in the Oregon Journal (which has editorially criticized the board), states that there was reason behind the action of the emergency board. He says that the proposal for the appropriation was offered by Governor Sprague with no enthusiasm, and that there was in fact no real sentiment in the entire emergency board for appropriating the state emergency funds for the purpose. Harry Banfield, able Portland business man, had been selected to manage the fair exhibit if financed, and the board members who voted for the appropriation were really voting confidence in Banfield's ability, rather than vigorously supporting the outlay of state money.

The action of the dissenting legislators was evidently based on a policy of utmost caution in handling the state's emergency fund. They are well aware of constant pressure upon state funds and were obviously sincere in their belief that it would be inadvisable to spend emergency money on the exhibit at the exposition, for which there is said to be some considerable lack of enthusiasm even in California.

In the Family

PORTLAND business men, visiting Klamath Falls on a Southern Oregon good-will junket Wednesday, found a community which considers itself more than ever a part of Oregon, with closer ties to Portland and the Willamette valley.

Transportation development, both the railroads and the highways, brought about the transformation in community psychology from the old days when Klamath faced definitely to the south. It's just a hop, skip and jump to the Willamette valley over the Willamette highway, to be finished in mid-summer, and The Dalles-California highway provides connections with other handy routes to the valley and other parts of Oregon. The big rail development came about 15 years ago when the Southern Pacific main line connected the valley with Eugene, followed by the Great Northern's construction connecting through Central Oregon and Klamath Falls to California's bay area.

Portlanders and other Oregonians should not overlook the fact that the Klamath basin really ties a part of California into Oregon, with close economic relations across the border all along the line through this area. So strong are these ties, and so favorable the general basin feeling toward Oregon in recent years, that there has even been sentiment in California sections of the basin to join up with Oregon. That's something!

RIGHT OR WRONG ABOUT PEOPLE

By DONALD A. LAIRD
 Ph. D., Sci. D.

MOST people, after all, are kind and have good intentions. It is perfectly natural to have an impulse to tell a man that his necktie is hanging around toward one ear and needs to be straightened, or to break the news to a society matron that her slip is dragging the sidewalk on her left side.

While the milk of human kindness runs freely, human nature is also overrun with the vinegar of embarrassment, or the acid of disappointed vanity. A quick way to become unpopular with people is to let them know their vests are buttoned crooked, hair mussed, faces smudged, or that anything else is wrong with their personal appearance.

Clothes and appearance in general get a great deal of careful attention, and while the dishevelments of appearance are purely accidental, people nevertheless feel that it is a reflection on them. This is in addition to the embarrassed feeling that many others have been laughing at them. All in all, it is not a comfortable situation to be in. The person pointing out the dishevelment is, of course, not to blame for the clothes being crooked or the smudge on the cheek. But he is likely to be included in the feeling of embarrassment which overwhelms the person he tries to help. Some disheveled people foolishly get downright angry at those who tell them a necktie is hanging on one ear.

Don't laugh in the face of a disheveled person, and don't tell him about something being askew. Let some other Good Samaritan break the news—save your kindly impulses for glad tidings.

Married life, too, would be much pleasanter for many couples if husbands would not comment about the peculiar hats selected by the little woman. For the same reason, the smart private secretary does not tell her boss about his vest being up one button too high.

It's too bad human nature is such that good intentions are often their own reward. Good intentions should be tempered with good judgment.

Mr. Reynolds' Crystal Ball Is Tarnished

WASHINGTON, April 10 (UP)—The reputation as a prophet of Sen. Robert R. Reynolds, (D-N.C.), was questioned today by some senators who passed around the congressional record with Reynolds' predictions underlined.

Speaking on foreign affairs yesterday, Reynolds declared:

"Norway, Sweden and Denmark did not get into the last World War. They were within a stone's throw of the war for more than four years, and they did not go into it. Norway, Sweden and Denmark today are within a stone's throw of a repetition of the same thing, and they are not going to get into it."

News Behind THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, April 10

Even the strongest congressional economists like Conductor Woodrum of the house appropriations committee privately believe the Roosevelt budget cut on relief is too severe in view of recent business developments. Mr. Roosevelt in executive conferences with his house and senate leaders, is understood to have told them to go ahead and increase his $985,000,000 estimate if they wish. He would prefer to have the $985,000,000 without the old Woodrum amendment requiring it to be spread out through 12 months, in order that a higher rate of monthly expenditure could be made as needed. Then when the $985,000,000 runs out next winter, he or his successor could seek additional funds.

Either way it is apparent that the government is falling into a serious financial situation. It is obvious the debt limit will have to be increased by next winter at the latest. The prospect is so clear that Mr. Woodrum and some of his house economizing associates who formerly opposed lifting the debt limit, are now talking about meeting the situation straight and increasing the limit before adjournment.

DOUBTFUL

Top floor republicans have changed their minds and now doubt that Mr. Roosevelt will try it. They so read certain signs of the past few weeks.

First Mrs. Roosevelt has signed to broadcast twice a week for Sweetheart toilet soap (proceeds to the praiseworthy American Friends Service committee). The politicians doubt that Mrs. Roosevelt would have made a contract if a campaign were in prospect.

Secondly, Mr. Roosevelt acted anything like a candidate in his handling of the Hull-Farley story. The president let a press yarn stand for two weeks that he approved Hull and disapproved Farley before making his denial. Candidates are always more alert, especially that candidate.

Thirdly, practically no one here believes Farley would now be campaigning openly unless he knew FDR did not intend to battle against him.

MCNUTT IN CLEAR

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau was supposed to offer a clean bill of tax health to Social Securityist Paul McNutt. The internal revenue bureau officials had recommended such action. Morgenthau declined because strict interpretation of the law precludes such statements. Nevertheless McNutt will have no further treasury trouble.

All the inside trouble he has had so far will be exposed if the now merging $233,000 case against Bowman Elder, eminent Indianapolis political associate of McNutt, goes to trial. (Exclusively forecast in this spot). The attorney whom he has employed to resist the claim is Harry B. Sutter.

It does not show on the record but the house agriculture committee has learned that the new credit easement bill being sponsored by the Farmers Union (and likely to pass congress) is the handiwork of left wing groups in the agriculture department. They wrote it in cooperation with the union and sold it to Agriculture Secretary Wallace.

Committee evidence indicates one-third of the farms in the United States might eventually find their way into government hands under the bill.

Walkout Threat Voiced by CIO Chief at Meet

NORTH BEND, Ore., April 10 (UP)—President Harry Bridges of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's union yesterday urged convention delegates to boost the special assessment for organizational work because "if the per capita tax increase is voted down, we may have to call a walkout on the coast to attain the five-year waterfront peace plan."

Bridges asked for an increase from 25 to 50 cents a month in the special assessment. After a long and heated discussion on proposals to raise the per capita tax, he recessed the convention session until tomorrow. Delegates approved a referendum on the assessment.

Explaining his threat of a coastwide walkout, Bridges said the five-year contract was necessary to prevent the federal bureau of investigation and employers' groups from "getting the unions" in the next few years.

Anyone interested in assistant leadership of the group of girls is asked to call Mrs. Kilpatrick. Marjorie Pierce is at the present time the only assistant.

Aprons and fancy work, booths, candy and eats and a fortune telling booth are planned for the bazaar to be sponsored by the Ladies Aid of the Presbyterian church on April 19, to be held in the school gymnasium instead of in the annex of the church as previously announced. The group has also entered the silver sales contest sponsored by the local radio station. Funds from the various activities will be used to help with remodeling the interior of the church. Members are landscaping the grounds of the church and a lawn will be seeded this spring.

Motion pictures including a comedy will be shown at the evening session of the bazaar.

WITNESS TELLS PORT SEIZURE

Editor's note: The following eye-witness description of the German capture of the Norwegian iron ore port of Narvik was telephoned by a United Press correspondent to Stockholm tonight after he succeeded in reaching the Swedish frontier town of Aabisco, about 10 miles from Narvik.

By PETER RHODES
 United Press Correspondent
 ASBISCO, Swedish Frontier, April 10 (UP)—German troops landed from two German destroyers yesterday captured Norway's vital iron ore port of Narvik after the torpedoing of two Norwegian warships in the harbor with an estimated loss of about 540 lives.

The two Norwegian warships, as well as a British ship lying in the harbor, fired on the attacking German destroyers but their resistance was broken quickly.

The German attack on Narvik, 200 miles above the Arctic circle on the Atlantic and chief loading port for Germany's iron ore supplies which the allied blockade had tried to choke off, began at 4:30 a. m. and 40 minutes later the Germans were in full possession.

The two German destroyers landed about 1500 to 2000 troops to carry out the occupation.

(Naval experts pointed out two destroyers could not carry 1500 to 2000 troops and suggested that a transport must have accompanied the destroyers.)

Although there were Norwegian army and naval units in Narvik and the city was protected by anti-aircraft batteries, neither the troops nor the people put up any display of resistance in the city proper.

So far as I could ascertain only one police officer and one soldier were killed in addition to the Norwegian sailors who lost their lives in the torpedoing of the two warships in the harbor.

LaGuardia Flays German Invasion At Mayors' Meet

PORTLAND, Ore., April 10 (UP)—The western regional meeting of the United States conference of mayors ended in Portland, yesterday enlivened by Chairman Fiorello H. LaGuardia's fiery denunciation of the invasion of Denmark and Norway.

The New York chief executive temporarily abandoned his prepared address on city problems to attack Germany's Scandinavian blitzkrieg as "shocking, unpardonable and revolting."

He said the invasion "is no surprise to all who know the ruthlessness, greed and brutality of the Hitler regime."

"The language of treaties is no longer understood, so in order to protect our own land it may be necessary to speak a language the totalitarian nations understand."

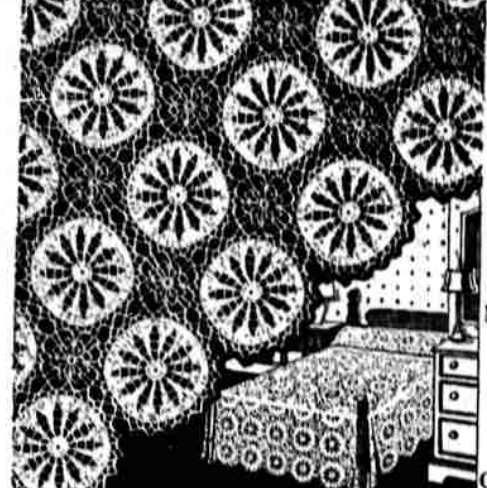

"We must have the necessary military safeguards to protect our people and our rights."

Returning to his announced topic, LaGuardia told the more than 100 executives attending the conference that unemployment remained the principal problem facing cities. In discussion that followed, Mayor Angelo J. Rossi of San Francisco reiterated his belief that a pickup in private employment offers the only solution.

Scientists are able to determine the age of meteorites by the radium they contain. Some of the stones appear to be 2800 million years old.
