MEMBER AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATION

Make It Complete

A WORTH WHILE effort is being made by the Klamath county chamber of commerce to assist in making the federal census of Klamath Falls complete. This is in line with a similar program carried out ten years ago, making it possible to get a check on a considerable number of persons who would otherwise have been missed by the census enumerators.

Persons who have not been interviewed by enumerators are asked to fill out one of the blanks, printed elsewhere in today's paper, and send it to the chamber of commerce. This information will then be turned over to the census officials and the proper check-up will be made. Because many people are not at their homes during working hours, it is possible that there will be many "misses" in the normal course of census-taking. This is a good way of minimizing these inaccuracies and making the federal census of the city as complete as possible.

The city census is scheduled for completion by April 15, and for that reason immediate action is necessary. Later on, the same plan may be extended to help make the county census accurate.

Public cooperation in these efforts is desirable.

Army With Worthy Cause

IN a period of hatred, cruelty and suffering in more lands and ways than we care to think about for long, it is relieving and inspiring to note that this is being observed as William Booth week.

William Booth founded the Salvation Army, and the army carries on today, 111 years after his birth, in the alleviation of spiritual and physical suffering. It has called to its colors men and women who are willing to toil and sacrifice for the benefit of others.

William Booth left them that tradition, and the work is widespread. It is effective in practical, sensible ways. It is an active force for good in hundreds of communities, and Klamath Falls is among them.

The Salvation Army leadership here is provided by Adjutant Norman Bowyer. It need not be said that he is hardworking, earnest and devoted to the cause. He would not be in the Salvation Army if he were otherwise. He and Mrs. Bowyer make a short budget go a long way in the various methods by which the Salvation Army brings help to those in need.

Heading the citizens' advisory board is Fred Fleet, who has given much of time and effort to the affairs of the Salvation Army. Many others have helped, especially at the time of the annual budget campaigns.

The Salvation Army, and those who help to make it a success, are engaged in an endeavor that is in cheering contrast to the very antithesis of what is being done by other armies, which are inflicting pain and oppression on a widening front. There has been some confusion and bewilderment among the decent people of the world as to which causes are worthy in these vast military operations. The Salvation Army has a cause about which we need have no doubts.

• RIGHT OR WRONG ABOUT PEOPLE

By DONALD A. LAIRD
 Ph. D., Sci. D.

Yes, this eating of sea food is good for brains. Being very precise and scientific, it must be said that fish do not nourish the brains directly in a way different from other foods. Fish is a brain food indirectly and for an interesting chain of reasons which took years of scientific detective work to find out.

The brain seems to work best when it is in a body which has an adequate amount of thyroxin, produced constantly by the thyroid gland astride the windpipe, just below the Adam's apple. When the thyroxin is low for any reason, the thinking becomes sluggish; in fact, the entire body becomes sluggish.

When the thyroxin is up to par, then the old thought machine hums along smoothly at top speed. A few pinhead-sized differences in the amount of thyroxin seems to make quite a difference in us.

Fish help the thyroxin factory in the necks keep up the needed production by supplying small amounts of iodine. Thyroxin centers around iodine. This essential iodine has to come from the foods eaten. We can't help it along by painting our necks with tincture of iodine from the medicine chest; that might make the neck smart but would not be a smart thing to do.

It reminds us of the rhyme about the house that Jack built: Here is the fish that supplied the iodine that went into the thyroxin that made the brain work better.

Fresh water fish are enjoyable eating, but usually do not have appreciable amounts of iodine. But sea fish, all sea foods, as a matter of fact, are among nature's best sources of iodine; and, without stretching a figure of speech too much, they are brain food.

But, like needing a rabbit for rabbit stew, first we must have a brain to feed.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, April 11—The British were caught asleep at the post again.

Official inside information here indicates they had at least a three day advance tip of Hitler's intent to transport his troops 300 or more miles across the sea to invade Scandinavia and they were unable to do anything effective to stop it.

The reason: Germany had shrewdly cut off the British fleet from the Skagerrak by laying heavy mine fields southward from a point near the Norwegian coast west of Kristiansand. This fresh field connected with the old German field off the north Danish coast running down to Holland. It barricaded Germany's several avenues straight north against everything British except the most daring submarines.

British laying of three fields north of Bergen had nothing to do with the German move except to serve as a feeble post mortem excuse. Nor did the then emerging British plan to go into northern Norway by force and establish air bases on an intention which has not yet been publicly recorded in view of Chamberlain's denial spur the Germans to action.

This new Hitler venture was certainly in preparation for months. Chamberlain was right. It could not have been organized in shorter time. Precision of the marching tables, concentration and collection of troops, transports and supplies betrays weeks of methodical arrangement.

It was timed to take opportunity advantage of thawing of ice in the Skagerrak rather than anything else.

NEW VENTURE

This blitzkrieg in Scandinavia is, therefore, regarded by all American officialdom as a German empire expansion venture in a new form. It is recognized as ultimate proof of an agreement between Stalin and Hitler for division of spheres of influence in Scandinavia. Berlin excuses that Germany is only offering armed protection to friends are accepted nowhere in view of their similarity to excuses offered in Czechoslovakia and Poland.

SHORT OF FACTS

A crisis in facts within Germany was one prime inspiration for Hitler's empirical grasp at Scandinavia. The Germans have managed to keep even from their citizens a knowledge of their most serious deficiencies, but tell-tale rationing has been applied more completely to food fats than to any other commodity.

Practically all fats consumed in Germany are imported, 54 per cent being whale oil.

The Germans will not only take stores of butter, eggs and bacon in Denmark but will deprive Britain of a major source of these supplies; 16 per cent of all British eggs, 22 per cent of its butter, and one-third of its bacon have been coming from the Danes. While London has been foraging around in Canada, the United States, and Australia for substitutes, the Danish conquest will certainly upset the

SIDE GLANCES

"We'll have to speak to Clara. Ever since she won that prize with her essay on 'My Career' she won't even make her own bed."

British housewife as much as the British foreign office. The Germans may be surprised to find whale oil fats missing in Norway. The great Norwegian production of this season in the Antarctic is now hidden aboard a dozen or more floating factories secure in South American ports. They have been stopping there on their way back to Norway within the past few weeks.

Britain recently bought two-thirds of this production and presumably now will get the rest.

NOT WORTHWHILE

Military advantages which Hitler is seeking in Scandinavia may turn out to be important, but authorities here doubt they were either worth the risk or a factor in the attempt. Norway will afford fairly good submarine bases, but Hitler does not have enough submarines to take much advantage of them. Air bases there would bring him no nearer central England than Wilhelmshaven. Furthermore the long north Norwegian coastline will afford an inviting battleground for the superior British fleet, as long as it is still superior.

Hitler may now take steps to secure his supplies of vital iron ore and get more lumber, but beyond this, authorities here are waiting to see what use he can make of the new war theatre he has opened.

He will have troubles too. Denmark must import most of her fodder and fertilizer; Norway must get grain, fruits, coffee, sugar and fodder through the blockade in order to live.

DECEPTION

The deception by which Germany completely screened her move was one of its most striking features. Herman Goering, the German un-scoothsayer, just a few days earlier threatened a direct assault upon the Maginot line. The German press diverted attention southward by screaming attacks upon British secret service activities in the Danube. A German troop concentration against Holland was even ordered as a further fake. Constant daily air bombing at station of larger principal mains.

Four absentee ballots were cast and will be opened next Monday night at the regular council meeting. In all, 254 votes were registered in Tuesday's balloting.

Telling The Editor

ABOUT SEWAGE DISPOSAL.
 KLAMATH FALLS—(To the Editor)—I wish to answer the article under "Telling The Editor," April 9 issue, written by Mr. R. C. Huskinson, route 1, box 393, Klamath Falls, Ore., regarding sewage disposal in the suburban area.

Such articles are welcomed by us, but it seems that the article leaves the impression that the health department is attempting to put something over on the suburban folks. I wish to state that we presented this petition to the community at their request. The interested parties are taxpayers in this county and wish to have the sanitary condition cleaned up at once and for all time.

The article speaks of one or two areas having bad spots in our community. I personally know of over 100 violations of existing state laws within a few feet of South Sixth street, let alone the whole area. Now for his solution of the problem, the construction of septic tanks—having the effluent run into drainage ditches. I doubt if there are enough people in the whole state of Oregon to charge the national stream pollution act, let alone Oregon's water purification and prevention of pollution bill, recently passed by the people of this state. After all the people made and passed these laws for their protection.

The article also neglected to mention that sewers would have to be built to serve the areas served by each tank and that maintenance and construction of said tanks would also be costly. It is also apparent that these drainage ditches do not pass through or near property in which the owners might object to having the effluent from said septic tanks pass.

I still maintain, and can give you plenty of evidence to show that the only possible way to abate the present conditions for all time, is via a sanitary sewer and treatment plant.

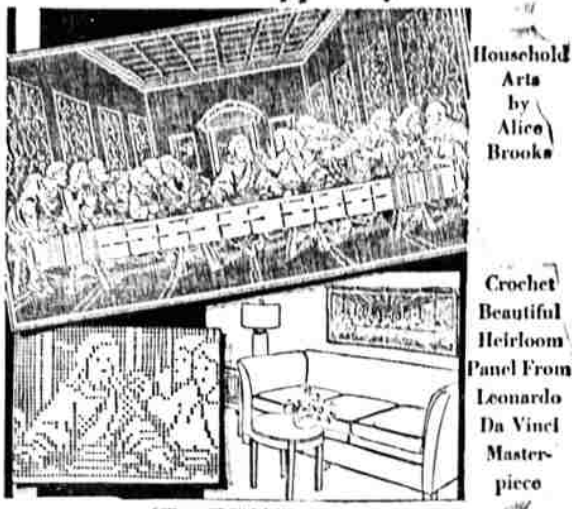

Very truly yours,
 W. J. CLOYES,
 Sanitarian.

SLEEPY HEAD

CHICAGO, (AP)—Judge Mason S. Sullivan explained to Theodore Weber that he wasn't giving him a fine of $1 and costs for sleeping, but rather for his poor judgment in picking a slumber spot.

Weber went to sleep on the Northwestern railroad tracks and two suburban trains were forced to wait until a policeman aroused him.

Operation of Milk Control Law Subject of Surveys

Research work on the operation of the present milk control law in the state of Oregon has been carried on in nearly every county of the state with resultant adjustment of past uniform regulations to conform more nearly to local requirements, says Dr. D. B. DeLoach, agricultural economist in the agricultural experiment station at Oregon State college.

The work is being carried on under a cooperative arrangement with the milk control board and under provisions of the milk control law which provide for such research work to be carried on by the experiment station.

The procedure in the past year has been to have investigators go into each county, or larger areas where possible, and study the local conditions in milk control. Facts developed are recorded in a formal report to the milk control board, which then calls a public hearing in the county. Reports based on these investigations have been made to the board for 26 counties. The board has in turn held hearings in 20 counties, as of April 1. New orders based on the findings of the investigation and facts brought out at the hearings have been issued in 21 counties.

These orders included complete withdrawal by the board from the eight counties, Gilliam, Grant, Harney, Jefferson, Linn, Morrow, Sherman and Wheeler. It was considered that the continued operation of the control law in these counties was not justified, as none, with the exception of Linn, had cities of any considerable size. Other factors brought about the withdrawal from Linn county.

In addition, the board has withdrawn from all parts of Crook county except Prineville, Douglas county except Roseburg and the coast, and Wasco county except The Dalles. In other counties where new orders have been issued, effort has been made to have the regulations of the board conform more nearly to local custom than has been the case previously. In some instances the minimum price for sale to consumers has been lowered and provisions made for quantity discounts which had not previously been allowed. In other places the permitted butterfat content for a given price has been adjusted to local custom.
