Among the New Books

At the City Library

By MRS. EMBERT FOSSUM
OTHER GODS, by Pearl Buck.
—When a young American mechanic, attached to an English scientific expedition, makes a lucky solo ascent of a Himalayan peak, he becomes overnight a great hero. In Peking, Bert Holm, who is really a naive country boy, meets and marries the shy, intellectual daughter of wealthy American parents. The story is of their attempt to make a happy marriage, and of the part played by American hero worshippers in their struggle to be human, rather than gods. Personalities in this book are rather clouded because of the similarity between Bert Holm and his wife and a living hero aviator and his poetic wife. Mrs. Buck apparently wishes to point out the dangers of hero worship, and indirectly of dictatorship, and that is certainly a worthwhile project. However, it doesn't sound real or vital as the author presents it, and a far cry from the truth. The description of the actual mountain climbing is excellent, and the whole story is interesting, though far from Mrs. Buck's best effort.

UNDER THE REDWOOD TREES, by George Digby.—The author, a young Irish-Englishman, with his wife, left New York in a second-hand car, drove through the south and south-west, and up the west coast, enroute to Vancouver. In the California redwood country they found a cabin on a deserted "ranch" and settled down to the joys and rigors of a protracted session of camp life. The book is an account of their trip and their months in California. George Digby writes largely as a reporter, seriously enough though with plenty of humor and ironical comments thrown in. He has a lively style and he expresses himself well (though with an air of jaunty familiarity which is a wee bit irritating.) The author puts an unerring finger on the weaknesses of the American people, seeing things that Americans either don't see or see so well they take it for granted without questioning their importance. So, besides being a very readable book, it might very well be good for what ails us.

EUROPE TO LET, by Storm Jameson.—This book contains four stories about the European situation during the last few years. The central character is an English journalist who wanders through Europe, describing the things and people he sees. The scenes of the stories are the Rhineland in 1923 during the French occupation; Vienna at its downfall; Prague in like situation; and Budapest. This is forceful writing that makes the nightmarish character of contemporary Europe almost too real. It is exciting, haunting and horrible. The human people are submerged, threatened, punished or obliterated. It is a book which ought to be read by everyone hardy enough to stand it. But read it at your peril—it will not make you feel better about anything. With Europe in the state it is in today, this book seems like a monument to people who deserve more than a monument.

OUR ARABIAN NIGHTS, by Ruth and Helen Hoffman.—The American twin sisters, authors of "We Married an Englishman," have written another travel record, this time about their adventures in furnishing a house at Bagdad, their numerous pets, and their sojourn in the tent home of Sheikh Fulan of Iraq. "Our Arabian Nights" is illustrated with gay, impudent little drawings. Furthermore, it is almost as amusing as the twins' first book, which is quite an accomplishment. The details are good—social relations, shopping, house keeping in a town as strange to us as Bagdad could not fail to be interesting. The book describes a town where to live on the wrong side of the Tigris is a national affliction. The Hoffman sisters can weigh character very neatly and they are acutely observant. The book is not all festive—there is some exciting but that is pretty grim, though even that is served with a spice of humor. I don't mean to imply that this book is all gaiety, song and dance—frankly, it palled a little on me in spots, but it is readable.

CLAIM FILING ADVISED UNDER SECURITY RULE

The widow and children of any worker insured under the federal social security act who died in January of this year are advised to file their claims immediately for monthly survivor insurance payments to avoid losing a month of benefits to which they may be entitled.

Wesley Hayes, Klamath Falls manager of the social security board, has announced that the federal law provides for retroactive payment of these benefits for not more than three calendar months preceding the month in which a survivor insurance claim is filed.

"If the father's death occurred in January and the claim is filed in April, it will be possible to make payments for January, February and March," Wesley Hayes explained. "But if the filing is delayed until May, the January payment can not be made."

Monthly survivor payments are a new feature of the social security act which became effective on last January 1. These payments are made under the following conditions: (1) the worker must have died since last December 31; (2) previous to death he must have been employed in at least six calendar quarters at jobs covered by the social security act with earnings from such employment of at least $50 in each of the six quarters and (3) the widow must have in her care a child or adopted child of the deceased worker that is under age 18.

The Klamath Falls office of the social security board, located at 611 Medical-Dental building, accepts claims from eligible surviving family relatives residing in Crook, Deschutes, Jackson, Jefferson, Klamath, Lake counties in Oregon and Modoc county in California.

THE DOCTOR
By EARL WHITLOCK
Some half-informed county commissioner somewhere, came out in the meeting recently with the statement that the average doctor in America earns around $3000 per year. It happened in the south, I think. Anyway, it made the news dispatches when some doctor, who knew the facts, corrected the commissioner and called attention to the error of a mere 300% in his statement. For the average doctor earns a net of about $1000 annually. Your own favorite physician may earn more than that, of course. But we're talking about the AVERAGE.

Now when you hold that average earning in mind, and then realize that the doctor has had a long, severe and costly training, that he must study constantly and must make continual investment in new equipment if he is to keep abreast of his profession, you will also come to realize that he does not take up the practice of medicine because he expects to get rich at it.

No, he studies the healing art because, in him more than in most of us, there is that fine urge to help humanity. And he dedicates his life to that cause.

Your doctor will probably deny this. He will scorn to be considered anything but hard-boiled and practical. He will pooh all claims to altruism. But don't let him fool you. When as a young man he took that solemn and splendid Hippocratic oath, he consecrated himself in a manner which bit deep into his young soul. He has never forgotten his duty to mankind. His life of constant self-sacrifice is the proof.
