INVESTORS GET ADVICE NOT TO EXPECT 'BOOM'

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Calif., July 18 (AP)—Investors were advised today not to hold their money in anticipation of interest rates going up on a war boom—because there isn't likely to be an interest boom.

Dr. J. Franklin Ebersole, Harvard university economist, told bankers attending the Stanford business conference he did not expect to see five or six per cent interest, or even four per cent.

"I believe the United States could fight a war on two and three-fourths per cent interest," Ebersole said.

He added that on a basis of supply and demand, he could see no need to expect an advance in interest rates.

Defense might take a few billion in extra funds, he said, but reserve banks have around ten billion in excess reserves; member banks another seven billion. And the public has about eleven billion in bank deposits above the amount needed, even with increased business activity.

Should prices rise, the government might fix rates. He said England had decided to fight her war on a three per cent coupon rate and the United States, a richer country, could get better terms.

Ebersole said the whole economic structure—money, plants and manpower—could be made subject to conscription if necessary, and he advised bankers to buy long term bonds now, co-operate freely and avoid pressing the government into hard-handed action.
