

PACIFIC WOOL GROWERS WILL HOLD AUCTION

The Portland warehouse of the Pacific Wool Growers will be the scene of the first competitive bidding wool auctions on the Australia-New Zealand plan ever held on the Pacific coast, when the first auction series sponsored by the wool cooperative will get under way August 5 and 6. The association's second auction will be at their Stockton, Calif., warehouse August 8 and 9.

Although new to the Pacific coast, wool auctions have for many years been the method used in Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain and South Africa, in marketing the bulk of the world's wool clip.

Between three and four million pounds of wool will be offered at the first series of the Pacific's auctions at Portland and Stockton. The Pacific's sales will be held in sequence with auctions scheduled for late July in Denver, Ogden and Billings, so that eastern mill buyers can conveniently make the circuit of the five sales on one trip west.

The new auction program, announced early this spring after two years of study and consideration by the directors of the wool cooperative, has met with a very favorable response from range growers in the northwest states and in California and Nevada, where the association also operates, says R. A. Ward, general manager, and some of the largest clips raised in these sections will be included in the auctions.

Original bag and graded lines of wool from Oregon, Washington and Idaho, including Valley Oregon, and an accumulation of Oregon mohair will make up the Portland offerings. At Stockton, California and Nevada wools, including a line of California lambs wool, will be put up for sale.

SHAW BRISTLES AT ROME REPORT

LONDON, July 24 (U.P.)—George Bernard Shaw bristled with characteristic indignation last night when told that an Italian newspaper had quoted him as predicting a British defeat in the war.

(The German wireless quoted the Italian newspaper Corriere Della Sera from Milan today as saying that attempts had been made to ban Shaw's writings from the British press because he predicted in an interview that Britain would lose the war.)

"Britain has not lost the war because she hasn't begun to fight it yet," Shaw exploded. "The Corriere Della Sera is telling a whopper."

"Since I am put down in my own country as public enemy No. 1, I am flattered that an Italian newspaper has such a high opinion of me that it thinks to impress the Italian people and bolster their morale by quoting me, though wrongly. I don't know whether Britain is going to lose the war, even with the help of God. We always declare war first and then prepare for it."
