Gentlemen, Take a Bow

LONG is the honor roll of those who have contributed to the completion of the Willamette highway and to the success of the dedication ceremonies at Salt Creek tunnel Tuesday.

The story has been told of the picnic meeting of Klamath and Eugene men in the Willamette pass country about 1922, when the highway project was definitely launched as an enterprise of the two communities. Many of the men who were present on that occasion are still in their communities, and Senator Charles L. McNary, who was present and introduced the first legislation in behalf of the road, is now a candidate for vice president of the United States.

As the years came and went, many others put their shoulders to the wheel and worked diligently for the completion of the highway. The Eugene group has been persistent, resourceful and closely cooperative in this great effort. Klamath people cannot express their full appreciation to their friends of the university city who have made the Willamette highway a No. 1 community enterprise all through the years.

The effort was centralized in the chambers of commerce of the communities. It found favor with the federal public roads administration, the federal forest service, and the state highway commission. A debt of gratitude is owed to all of the officials of these agencies who gave their help to the project.

It was, of course, fully justified help and they were properly serving their public in advancing an enterprise of such vast public benefit. But that should not detract from our appreciation of their recognition of the pleadings for this road.

Coming down to the dedication, which was so well arranged and so smoothly executed, credit must go particularly to the two committees of the Eugene and Klamath chambers, headed at Eugene by J. E. Turnbull and at Klamath Falls by Mitchell Tillotson. Many others, including of course the highway bureaus of the state and federal governments and the forest service, gave full cooperation, and Governor Sprague unhesitatingly accepted an invitation to be the main speaker.

The completion of the highway has received widespread publicity, all of it favorable. Some of the newspapers on highways which are, in a sense, competing with the Willamette, have discussed the significance of the opening favorably, and have carried full news stories about it.

The great Willamette highway is now open. Traffic will determine destiny. We have no doubts about its future.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON
 WASHINGTON, July 31—The American delegation found out a lot more at Havana than its bulging portfolios will record. The difficulty with which the United States is confronted all south of the Rio Grande became apparent in the convolutions of the problem child of the Americas, Argentina. The Argentine statesmen were afraid of the United States but more afraid of Germany. That's it. They wanted the security of this hemisphere but they also wanted neutrality. Theirs was the strictly neutral role of Belgium and Holland. It may have looked to American news readers like at least a fourth and a half column policy, but it was really only "appeasement" again. (My information comes well from Havana.)

FINANCE
 Argentina is determined to make itself more self-sufficient, less a raw material country. That is a laudable purpose. It would like our financial aid to industrialize, and believes (correctly) its central government credit is so good that it can borrow in Wall Street anytime.

But for us to finance Argentine industrialization, as indeed we have been privately doing for years, is to reduce and cut off eventually our actual or potential market for our industrial products. They won't want ours when they can make their own.

Knowing all that, the Americans at Havana were nevertheless willing to finance Argentina if the Argentines would only play ball. They did and we did, simply because there is something far more important than balanced economics and that is life itself.

JOB FOR U. S.
 News headlines have glibly proclaimed the defensive security that the conference assures for the Americas, without any recognition of the fact that U. S. battleships alone will be responsible for that security. No one else in this hemisphere has anything to supplement the pious declaration. The U. S. delegation was entirely aware of that during the conference, but naturally wanted diplomatic support.

The conference, therefore, amounts only to a step, a big step, toward diplomatic solidarity behind our guns.

NOTE: Washington let the word "around the conference" be strengthened the Guarani marine garrison and planning to base additional ships at this single keystone defense point of the Caribbean.

BUSINESS VIEW
 The patience which State Secretary Hull exhibited was not shared by all the American business men who sat around the hotel Nacional.

In their excellently schooled opinion, our friends down south do not respect anyone who has power and yet lets his toes be trampled.

The new dealism may be somewhat tarnished by experience but in their opinion the way to handle the defense of this hemisphere is with a gun, not a baton. The Latins, they say, have feared and disliked the U. S. as the colossus of the north, a phrase which seems far more dramatic than accurate. No ships have been sailing between our legs bearing gold from the south. Rather we have been a Gulliver towing such ships from those ports as we could find.

POWER POLICY
 These business men with experience favored a firmer Latin policy than the administration has seen fit to adopt under Mr. Hull. They thought the way to settle the Mexican problem for instance would be to:

- (1) Stop buying Mexican silver at an excess price.
 - (2) Blockade Mexican exports of "stolen oil" and "stolen chicle." (Theft refers to seized American lands for which no remuneration has been received.)
 - (3) Retaliation with force for any anti-American acts.
- The theory of course is to create respect by power, not by kindness alone.
- Even Cuba, according to local Americans in Havana, has virtually confiscated large sums of American investments in mortgages, (sugar controls, etc.) The new constitution puts a 30 year (yes 30) moratorium on all existing mortgages, and a low rate of interest. Mortgages already greatly modified, according to capacity to pay, are now taken within the scope of the new gift constitution.
- If our guns are going to defend this hemisphere, our diplomats and economists should be allowed to defend it with equal

DORRIS PIONEER RESIDENT PASSES

DORRIS—A native son and also a pioneer of Dorris met a tragic end Saturday evening, July 27, when S. Q. Grafford took his own life while alone at his home. Ill health and mourning for his deceased wife are believed to have been the cause. Just a few days before his death Mr. Grafford had returned from the Yreka hospital where he had been undergoing treatment for some time. The elderly gentleman was a familiar figure on the streets of Dorris where his quiet reserve and unassuming manner won him a large number of friends.

S. Q. Grafford was born in Yolo county, California, on July 10, 1867, and resided there for nearly 21 years. He then moved to Northrop, Wash., where he took up a homestead. In 1900 he married Jessie Cameron and a few years later he and his bride moved to Dorris where he has lived ever since. Mrs. Grafford preceded him in death about two and a half years ago. At the time of his passing Mr. Grafford was 73 years and 17 days old.

He leaves to mourn him two sisters, Mrs. Kate Watts and Mrs. Linnie Miller, both of Solano county, Calif., and a brother, Cleveland Grafford, as well as several nieces and nephews.

Jess Traudway Funeral parlors of Mt. Shasta had charge of the funeral services which were held in the city hall at 3 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon. Interment was in Picard cemetery where, according to instructions left in a note by Mr. Grafford, he was buried beside his wife. Rev. Horn of the Nazarene church officiated at the services.

Perhaps the supreme tragedy of the present epoch is the fact that the friends of democracy in many lands . . . have failed to present to their children a great and ennobling goal toward which to strive.—Educational Policies Commission in a report approving selective service.

In Hartford, Conn., a woman refused a job because it would require her to climb stairs. It is evidently her aim to start at the bottom, and stay there.

The Rev. Frank L. Wemmet of Grants Pass, Ore., will officiate. The commitment service and interment will be in the family plot in the Linkville cemetery. Friends are respectfully invited to attend. Ward's Klamath Falls funeral home is in charge of the arrangements.

Telling The Editor

OMINOUS
 KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (To the Editor)—Your gentlemen of the Impatience is so typical of the general run that I think your treatment of the subject is quite inadequate. True, it takes time—even to be impatient, and the general lack of vision, vigilance and preparedness of America is getting ominous and prompting an attitude of hurry that is quite liable to lead us in a general repugnance of leisure—so to speak.

The great demand in the present is for more airplanes, guns and ships. It is a short-sighted one! The combined resources of Germany, Russia, Japan and Italy are quite equal to any effort we may apply. They can match any weapons we may build. It is therefore a foolish competition that we are fostering and one which will not give us an edge in this business of war!

The problem of America is to get out in front—and fast! How?

By doing the thing that we excel in—invention!

For the past twenty years invention has been sort of hamstrung in our country, due to the penchant for standardized production. The ideas are here but lack for expression. The manufacturers cannot stand a rapid pace of change, due to the necessary changes for tooling too often with their consequent costs and delays.

This has caused our inventors to seek markets abroad with the result that our ideas are going to our enemies. And with the twenty years start that Germany has we will never catch up unless some means is taken to get the creative boys a market at home.

I have tried for years to get the aviation boys to discard this radical engine which slows a plane some ten percent for a line engine of the unit type which is positively dependable, causes less resistance, is easily started by hand and enjoys the distinction of being replaceable by units which causes much less work in war time and peace as well. There are literally hundreds of new ideas which could be put to work for us if it were not for the pig-headedness of our present manufacturers and the complexity of our economic system.

When it comes to the point where the introduction of something new causes men to lose jobs there is something wrong. The advent of the diesel engine would cause all of the employees of the refining industry to lose jobs—so there you are!

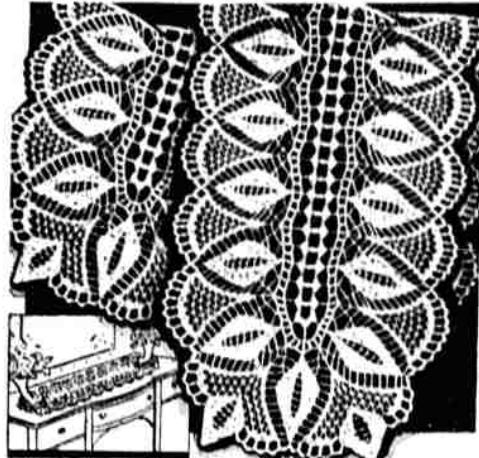

For the past twenty-five years I have kept a mechanical diary of mechanical and scientific ideas as they came to me. Like Babson's statistics, this sort gives one an insight into the future. By observing the things that come to life that coincides with your record you can get a sort of prophetic insight of things to come. The potential power of new things is the greatest force on earth and if we continue to neglect this force we are about sunk as a nation!

The dinosaurs of the past ages got awful big gobbling up everything that were their inferiors but there came a day when they ceased to exist. I'll bet an Oregon dollar that an

PLANS PROGRESS FOR AUCTION OF LAKE LIVESTOCK

LAKEVIEW—Plans of the Lakeview Rotary club for a livestock auction sale for boys and girls in the FFA and 4-H clubs throughout the county are progressing very satisfactorily under the general chairmanship of Ernest Fesch. Each week a group of Rotarians visit various boys and girls throughout the county and then report back to the club on the progress of the various projects of the young people who are visited. Every member of the club is working on one or more committees in an effort to make the sale, August 23, an event which will be so successful that it can become an annual project for the Rotarians.

Don Ameche, who starred in "Four Sons" and later became the father of a fourth son, probably will keep out of the way when future quintuplet pictures are being cast.

A cartoonist depicts Hitler as having sold his soul to the devil. Can this be an attempt to gain for the fuhrer the title, "Faust in war, etc.?"

Water purchased at that rate from the city, it is stated, is cheaper than pumping from individual wells.
