RAILROAD NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Gaetz passed through Klamath Falls early Wednesday en route to the coast where they will enjoy a motor trip on the Redwood highway. They have recently returned from Colorado where they visited friends and relatives. Gaetz is superintendent of the Klamath division of the Great Northern railroad.

While in Colorado both Mr. and Mrs. Gaetz had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Wendell Wilkie, wife of the republican nominee for the presidency. The meeting took place in Estes park where Mrs. Wilkie was vacationing with a sister. The Gaetz reported Mrs. Wilkie as being a charming and delightful person.

Downing Jenks, former trainmaster in Klamath Falls for this section of the Great Northern, is now located in the north and writes friends here that he is enjoying his new job immensely. Jenks is trainmaster on the west end of the Kalispell division, between Whitefish, Mont., and Hildyard, Wash.

Here on business Thursday were Southern Pacific officials including M. L. Jennings, assistant to the general manager, and F. C. Lathrop, general passenger agent, both of San Francisco, and W. D. Lamprecht of Duaneville, trainmaster. The three were discussing arrangements for the transportation of troop trains which will move through Klamath Falls the last of August until September 1. The trains go from Fort Lewis, Wash., to points in Arizona, California and Nevada.

Tennessee Town Doesn't Need Conscription; Every Youth of Age Joins Army

MORLEY, Tenn., Aug. 22 (AP)—By the eternal, old Andy Jackson would have been proud of the men of Morley!

They are the same breed of lean, tough mountaineers who followed him at New Orleans against the British, into Florida against the Spaniards, and against the Indians more than a century ago.

Conscription? Not for them. They just up and joined the army when the word got around that soldiers were needed to pack a rifle.

And maybe some day the war department will put a bronze tablet in this mountain hamlet with raised letters reading:

"This is the town of Morley, Tenn., where every able-bodied eligible man volunteered his services to his country in the year 1940."

There are about two-score families in this village in the shadow of the Cumberland mountains and all their sons who are eligible are in the army. Letters come back to the little postoffice with strange postmarks of far-away places such as Panama and the Philippines.

Out of Morley have gone 24 youths to don soldier's garb. The last was 23-year-old Roy Brannan, a wide-shouldered, 175-pound hill lad towering six feet and two inches.

Roy rode down the big road with the recruiting officer early this month to leave behind the cluster of cottages, the general store and the postoffice that the village comprise.

Most of the youths found their way into the army through the one-room postoffice where Mrs. Carrie Witt, a middle-aged motherly woman, gave them counsel and advice.

"I love every one of them," she said. "I urged them to join the army because I thought they would do better off there than working in the coal mines part time or doing nothing. And, too, the country needs them."

Sergeant John B. LaPlante, recruiting officer from Knoxville, Tenn., is convinced Mrs. Witt "has done the outstanding recruiting job" in the country.

"She's undoubtedly the star recruiter in the United States," the sergeant says proudly.

And so it is that Morley typifies the spirit of the "Volunteer State."
