Tips From Garden Notebook

By A Klamath Gardener

Whether one is a gardener or not, who is not thrilled by the early spring blooming bulbs? Daffodils and tulips are about the most common of the early flowering bulbs, and which most of you are quite familiar with and which do so well in this country.

Tulips do so well here in most locations that it is a shame that there are not thrifty borders or beds of them in more gardens. Most of the spring flowering bulbs are so simple to grow and the varieties are so many that a succession of blooms of some kind of bulb or tuber may be had from the time the snow begins to melt until the other spring and early summer flowers begin to bloom.

There is so much to be said about the different kinds and varieties of bulbs that it will take several weeks to cover their history, which is so interesting, and the kinds and their growing habits.

LOW-COST PROJECTS ARE 9 PER CENT OF BUILDING IN '40

Approximately nine per cent of all urban homes built in the United States during the first six months of 1940 are contained in low-rent public housing projects financed by the United States housing authority.

More than 240,000 new homes were provided in the non-farm areas of the United States during the first half of this year, according to the United States department of labor. This was an increase of eight per cent over the first half of 1939.

MODERNIZED KITCHEN BIG AID IN FALL

It is during the canning season that a modern step-and-labor-saving kitchen is most appreciated, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries bureau.

The backache, which was the usual accompaniment to carrying large pans of fruits or vegetables from sink to table to stove in the course of their preparation for canning in the old-fashioned kitchen, simply is unheard of by the modern housewife whose working units are streamlined together by counter tops of the correct height.

Inasmuch as a large share of the work incidental to canning centers around the sink, it is important that this fixture be of the modern labor-saving type.

A double-compartment sink of acid-resisting enamel provides ample space for washing fruits and vegetables with never a worry about stains or blemishes from acids or juices. A removable strainer catches parings and seeds while a safety ledge on the back of the drainboard offers a convenient place for jars and glassware.

All good methods of home canning depend on the underlying principle of killing bacteria and preventing their future development. For this reason absolute cleanliness in every step of canning is essential. Enameled cast iron sinks with integral drainboards have no cracks or crevices to provide a lurking place for germs. The smooth surface of the enamel and the rounded easy-to-clean corners offer protection against contamination of foods.

A retractable hose on the sink that sprays tempered hot or cold water simplifies the cleaning of the food, removing skins from fruit or vegetables, sterilizing jars, and other tiring processes of canning.

After washing the fruit, all utensils such as paring knives, kettles, condiments, etc., needed in the next step in canning, are within arms' reach in the steel cabinets beneath the sink, the counters and on the wall around the working units.

Since the pantry is a cubby-hole of the past, every item that formerly found refuge on a hook, nail or shelf in the pantry, is now in one or the other of the cabinets. With this convenient arrangement, the housewife never finds it necessary to leave large pans of simmering food

Here's the Clearwater

With government building permit figures showing that over 240,000 dwelling units were built in non-farm areas of the United States during the first half of 1940, and with FHA acceptances of mortgages for appraisal rising in volume, there is every indication that 500,000 or more new U. S. homes will be built this year, according to W. C. Bell, chairman of Western Homes foundation.

"This rising tide of home building and the shining outlook for it in the face of a war situation have finally silenced anti-building industry propaganda," Bell declared. "In 1938, when while she rummages around on a high shelf or in a low dark corner for what she needs. Storage of pots and pans is centered near the range; utensils used for the cleaning and preparation of foods are stored in the roomy cabinets under the sink; and all accessories are easily available for each operation.

When the food has been cooked and placed in jars, the housewife hardly moves a step to the cabinets where it is a matter of but a few minutes to store her food away for use when needed. Climbing on a chair to store jar after jar on some out of the way shelf in the pantry, or making endless trips up and down the basement stairs to the old-style fruit cellar, are wasteful motions that are outmoded today.

Cabinet sinks offer many labor and time-saving devices including a towel drying rack, a place for soap, steel wool, chips, dish cloths, and all articles that are needed for cleaning up when the canning is finished. The cabinet drawers slide easily, close quietly, and are lined with linoleum to deaden the sound.

dustry's defense has been in the services in home ownership it has provided.

"At the forefront of these services is that of small-home design, now available in practically every community. This is especially true in the Northwest, where retail lumber dealers have published a group of 26 of their own popular smallhome designs as 'Western Living Homes.' The 'Clearwater,' issued this week, is an example. With an interior planned for efficiency plus livability and charm and with beautifully balanced exterior lines, here is a home that should be a haven of happiness for any small family now renting."

Information and service on the Clearwater may be had through retail lumber dealers or from Western Homes Foundation, 917 Lloyd Building, Seattle.

HIGH MONASTERY

Since the 14th century, monks have lived atop a barren, isolated rock in northern Thessaly, access to which is made by a rope and net, worked by a windlass.

To save steel, Germany is using bombs with concrete casings, which is one more way to cement unfriendly relations.
