TOUCHDOWN

By Earl Whitlock
It's pretty nice to live in a country which, for twenty years, has used its army and navy chiefly to beat Notre Dame. And where war headlines are commonly subordinated to those that announce football victories. Let's hope it will continue that way.

On thousands of gridirons, this fall, tens of thousands of fine, husky youngsters are sweating and straining and bruising themselves in the rough body contacts of football. The great gains they make, in those contests are not matters of yardage, nor even of the big varsity letter nor the adulation of the cheering throng.

They're learning team work—the fact that no matter how brilliant a back may be, he cannot go far without a stubborn line and good blockers ahead of him. Here is the lesson of organization. They're learning to hold their fiery young tempers under bitter provocation—self control. They're learning to fight losing battles gamely and to win them fairly. Here is sportsmanship. They're learning to give all they've got—and a little more—to their school and their coach and their team-mates, just for the sake of winning. And this is a pretty fine brand of unselfishness, when you come to think of it.

It's a tough game and a rough game. But it's a glorious game for young manhood and no other competitive sport calls for such an abundance of those fine qualities which go into the making of a real man. On the football field of any school, the boys in uniform are pretty sure to be the cream of the crop.

Next Monday Mr. Whitlock of the Earl Whitlock Funeral Home will comment on Not Conscripts—Patriots.
