

DORRIS HIGH HOLDS THANKSGIVING MEET

DORRIS—Butte Valley high school held the regular student body assembly on Wednesday afternoon. The assembly was opened by the salute to the flag. Lurena Rambo then gave a short talk on the significance of Thanksgiving. This was followed by the assembly singing "God Bless America." The latter part of the program was a panel discussion of citizenship by members of the student council.

The G. A. A. box social held last Friday was a decided financial success. The net receipts amounted to $21, this going towards the purchasing of uniforms for the drill team. At the close of the social Betty Wilkins was awarded the prize for the best decorated box.

Last week practice started on the junior play to be held on December 13 and 14, with Miss Ebenshade directing. This year the juniors have chosen an interesting three-act farce titled "Fixin' Aunt Fanny," by Farley O'Brien.

The Thanksgiving vacation will be held November 21 and 22, school opening again on Monday, November 25.

The average daily attendance for Butte Valley high school was higher during the past month than it has ever been, averaging 101. This is due to the large enrollment in the night classes.

Now a crafts class has been organized under the direction of Miss Luttrell and will meet at the high school next Monday. Everyone interested in leather or metal work or other crafts is invited to attend.

PROGRAM PREPARED FOR HOMECOMING

OREGON STATE COLLEGE A homecoming program designed for alumni rather than students has been announced by Larry Marshall, chairman of the committee. The time-consuming and rather dangerous noise parade has been dispensed with as has the midnight matinee, but more plans for alumni entertainment are included in the events of November 29 and 30.

The traditional Friday night football rally prior to the U. of O. O. S. C. game will start with a torch-light parade ending at the annual Rook bonfire, long considered the outstanding collegiate rally bonfire in the west. Elaborate house signs will be featured by all living groups as usual.

Saturday, a special luncheon for classes of 1920 to 1923, inclusive, will precede the game at 2 o'clock. In the evening an alumni reception and dinner dance in the remodeled Memorial Union ball and banquet room will end the day's events. A brief dedication service for the remodeled portions of the building is planned as a feature of the dinner program.

PTA CARD PARTY HELD AT DORRIS

For the first time in its history pinocle as well as whist was played. Sixteen tables of whist occupied the school auditorium while ten tables of pinocle were in the school library.

While refreshments were served at the close of the evening scores were totaled. William Hagelstein won the turkey for the highest score in pinocle and Mr. C. Moteschbacher won the chicken for second highest score. In whist Mr. John Olson held the highest score and won a turkey while Mrs. George Olson won a chicken for second highest score in whist. Mrs. Haight received the consolation prize in whist of a can of cranberries.

Corfu Refugee Tells Vivid Story of Experience During Italian Attack on Island

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following dispatch, written exclusively for The United Press by Alma Godfrey, 28, native of Cornwall, England, who was employed as a governess at Corfu before the outbreak of the war, and who was the last English woman to leave the island, gives the first connected story of events on the heavily-bombed isle.)

By ALMA GODFREY (Copyright, 1940, by United Press)

ATHENS, Nov. 21 (UP)—I have just come from the most bombed island in the Mediterranean after a nightmare journey of three days in a tiny motorboat through mine fields, torrential rains and submarine-infested waters.

The island paradise of Corfu has been turned into an island of terror by Italian bombers. Inhabitants are now living in the hills or caves to escape the showers of death which have not ceased from the skies for more than a fortnight.

The first indication of war we had at this peaceful, sun-bathed island was a visit from five monoplane flying the Greek colors of blue and white on Nov. 2 at 9:30 a. m. They bombed us and then went away and were followed by another relay of five bombers.

First they confined their attacks to the town of Corfu, but after pounding the town daily for as much as eight or more hours they began extending their attacks through the whole island. When I left they not only were bombing the town but villages, fields and isolated cottages.

In just over a fortnight of bombing they killed 75 people and wounded more than 400. When the first group of bombers came over everyone thought they were Greek and cheered.

I was in the street looking up at them when, mechanically, slowly and seemingly without concern, they started to unload their cargoes of destruction and death. The German consul's wife, Frau Spangler, caught my arm and screamed: "Take cover, you fool!"

We darted into a nearby cellar where the thought swept my mind that if bombs did get me they would get an enemy subject with me, too. The first bomb fell in the Jewish quarter, burying 17 persons alive in one house. The German consul, after the first wave passed, immediately hung out five swastika flags, apparently hoping the Italian pilots would see them and leave him alone.

The first days of the intensive raids made many persons flee to the hills with the result that those of us who remained in town had only bread to eat. The people lived in the open, sleeping on blankets and with nothing to protect them from the rain. The poor people took shelter in the catacombs underneath the ancient fortress built by the Phoenicians.

yelling that the Italians were attempting a landing.

I scrambled out of bed, pulling on a few clothes. I could see a confused mass of warships which I took to be British, Greek and Italian. The sky was lit up by flashes from the naval guns and explosions. I saw one ship hit—saw a terrific flare and then gigantic flames break out. The ship slowly sank, rearing high in the air from the stern.

I was told that the Italians attempted a landing at a later date but I can not say there was such effort. Anyway, no Italians landed on the island.

The second day the Italians attempted to dive-bomb the town of Corfu. Six planes came roaring out of the sky with sirens wide open. Machine gun bullets spattered everywhere, sounding like a chorus on the river Thames.

They dived so steeply that it seemed impossible they could pull themselves out before crashing into the housetops which they barely cleared as they dumped bombs of various sizes, including fire bombs.

I saw 20 bombs dropped in one garden alone.

British Consul Guy Clark, of Worthing, England, refused to leave the island. He is the only Briton there now. There are no Americans.

The police rounded up 1500 Italians, placing Italian Consul Gloria and Italian Vice Consul Scapini under house arrest but later they were seen taking shelter along with the Greeks during the air raids.

I left aboard a small motorboat manned by a Greek skipper, two men and a boy, none of whom spoke English. We left under cover of darkness and reached Lequais at 5 a. m. where we had coffee and food. My, how good it tasted! We remained until 5 p. m. and then left. Inhabitants of the island pleaded with us not to leave, stating that we were throwing our lives away. But I felt since we had come so far we might just as well go on.

We traveled always by night through drenching rains and rough weather. I lay on a plank covered by a single blanket. Several times I was pitched off because the weather was so rough. I vomited until I thought I must lose my entire insides.

Suddenly I heard the captain yelling and joined him to see what was happening. We were in a mine field but we had no maps or charts since none of the Corfu fishermen use them, knowing their own waters like their own hands. We picked our way gingerly through the mine field.

We finally arrived at Patras more dead than alive. Did it seem good? Rather! All I wanted was a hot bath and a bed.
