

EXTENSION OF VOCATIONAL WORK FAVORED

Klamath chamber of commerce directors have adopted a report of the legislative committee favoring extension of vocational training in preference to establishment of junior colleges in Oregon.

The chamber committee took no definite action on any specific bill, but reported that in principle it believes the most practicable plan, and that with the greatest chance of realization, is one for extending vocational training, either through new schools or through schools already operating.

Representatives Boivin and Semon of Klamath county are among the sponsors of a vocational training bill now pending in the legislature.

Word coming here from Salem is that the proposed junior college bill has little chance of passage and might be vetoed if adopted by the legislature.

The chamber also is on record against major changes in the unemployment compensation laws. A motion in the legislative committee to support a measure eliminating experience rating was defeated. Opinion on the matter is divided, it appears from the discussion, but the board of directors sustained the committee's action.

Sports Editor to Air Corps

Picture shows Bill Cummings, Herald and News sports reporter, who has accepted an appointment for training as a flying cadet in the air corps. Cummings is leaving immediately for Santa Maria, Calif., to begin training. As a member of the civilian training class here under the CAA, he has written the column "Prop Wash" in these newspapers, describing his experiences in learning how to fly. Cummings will be succeeded by Bob Leonard as sports editor.

CUMMINGS TO BE FLYING CADET

Bill Cummings, for nearly two years sports editor of The Herald and News, has received an appointment as a flying cadet in the army air corps.

Cummings goes from here to Vancouver Barracks for a final physical check-up and report for enlistment, after which he will report to Allan Hancock college of aeronautics, Santa Maria, Calif., to start primary training as a flying cadet. Three months later he will be assigned to other bases for basic and advanced training. This training leads to a second lieutenantcy in the air corps.

The young newspaper man has accepted an appointment as flying cadet rather than wait to be called into the infantry under his reserve second lieutenant's commission.

Cummings came to The Herald and News after graduating in the spring of 1939 from the school of journalism at the University of Oregon. In addition to sports, his "beat" has included labor and utilities. He is a native of Medford.

Bob Leonard will succeed Cummings as sports editor of The News and Herald. Leonard has been night editor for the past year.
