CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Klamath-Lake Christian Endeavor Union held their monthly executive meeting at the Mt. Laki church Tuesday evening with the coming state convention as the main topic of discussion.

After the regular routine of business, various phases of the Christian Endeavor state convention were taken up. The group was reminded again that the date for the convention is April 24 to 27, and the need for local registrations was stressed. It was reported that the local Rotary club has been cooperating with K-L Union and that many of their number have registered. Local registration is an important factor in that it will provide the necessary expense funds.

Young people of the Union were asked to participate in the four contests sponsored by the state union. The Junior CEers will take part in a Bible verse memory contest; high school groups will contest in Bible memory and dramatic interpretation; young people's groups will participate in a Bible exposition or application contest. For the more artistic members of the union, there is the poster contest. The prizes for each contest are the same. In each case the first prize is a full scholarship to Christian Endeavor summer conference at Turner in August, the second prize a half scholarship, and the third a conference registration.

At the close of the meeting the young people of Mt. Laki society served pie and cocoa to the group in the grange hall.

Church Acts to Keep Religion Up In Military Life

To meet what is termed "The greatest religious dislocation in the history of America," the Episcopal church has reorganized its commission on army and navy chaplains and is planning a program which will enable that church to do its part in the religious care of men in the armed forces.

The new commission will be responsible for the selection of Episcopal chaplains for military and naval posts, and will supply necessary equipment, as well as counsel regarding methods of work.

There are approximately 21,000,000 young men in this country between the ages of 18 and 35. One-half of these have been or will during the coming five years be uprooted from their normal civilian relations and transferred to areas of service under control of the government.

Two million youths between 18 and 21 have within the last few years received training in CCC camps. Five million young men within the next five years will be called into service for at least a year of military training.

In addition, between two and three million young men will leave their homes to work in plants, engaged in manufacture of arms and other essentials of national defense. "This social dislocation," declares Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, chairman of the general committee on army and navy chaplains, "creates a religious crisis unparalleled in American history. Thoughtful men are convinced that unless this crisis be successfully met, the consequences will affect organized religion in ways which will prove most disastrous. If our civilization is to be saved the religious faith of America's young manhood must be preserved."

Bishop Sherrill says that at the end of last year there were 140 Episcopal clergymen serving as chaplains in the armed forces, exclusive of the federally mobilized national guard. He said, "It is imperative that the life of the soldier and sailor be kept as normal as possible by association with ordinary church life. The camps may necessitate the strengthening of clergy personnel."

Commending the attitude of the war department, Bishop Sherrill quoted a recent statement by General G. C. Marshall, chief of staff to the effect that "we are anxious to establish the closest possible contact between civilian and military religious representatives. There should be no fear that any young man will suffer spiritual loss during the period of his military service, and, on the contrary, we hope that the young soldier will return to his home with a keener understanding of the sacred ideals for which our churches stand."
