

TROPHY WON BY CHILOQUIN DEBATE TEAM

CHILOQUIN—After an absence of four years the debate championship for the south-central district of Oregon returned to Chiloquin, and with it a fine trophy. Henley high school held the title during the past two years. This year, however, the local high school stormed through the district tourney held here Wednesday with loss of but one debate.

In the final standing Chiloquin placed first with three wins and one loss; Keno ranked second with two wins and two losses; while the champs of 1939 and 1940 trailed with but one win in four debates. Observers confidently predicted that Bonanza would repeat this year for the third successive time, thereby gaining permanent possession of the debate trophy. Keno and Chiloquin were given little chance.

The new district champions are: affirmatives, Ada Ciacomelli, Rosemary Richards and Floyd St. Clair; negatives, Lewis Pohl and Lois Loosley. The team is coached by Don Brookman.

The award for the outstanding debater of the tournament was presented by Critic Judge Marvin Krenck of the University of Oregon to Lee Chase, son of the Keno high school principal. As Chase is a sophomore, great things will be expected of him in his remaining year of high school.

The win entitles the locals to compete in the state debate tourney which will be held in Eugene on March 28 and 29. The tournament will be composed of the eight district winners. The local team will be present at the tournament if funds can be raised for the trip.

Children Need Greater Supply of Vital Vitamin

By MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX

Children of subnormal growth and adults with constipation, flatulence, headaches, lack of stamina, and chronic fatigue constitute a defense hazard. Nutritional scientists explain that insufficient vitamin B1 is largely the cause of these conditions.

Salad greens, green vegetables, fresh fruit, milk and meat in liberal amounts are good sources of this important vitamin. But these sources are relatively expensive for families on low food budgets. One of our national problems is to find a cheap and plentiful source of vitamin B1 (Thiamin).

Wheat Germ Cheap

Dr. Henry Borsook, professor of biochemistry, California Institute of Technology, offers a solution. "The problem of finding a cheap rich source of thiamin and the rest of the vitamin B complex, can be solved," he says, "by the use of the wheat grain which millers call the 'scalp of the sizings' or 'middlings plus germ.' This cereal is probably the cheapest natural food source of the vitamin B complex. It can be cooked as porridge or baked in bread muffins, scones, etc. For something under two cents per day per person, it provides an optimum amount of vitamin B1 in palatable form."

Dr. Borsook gives this advice to women's committees on defense through nutrition. He says that by prodding your local grocer and by being persistent about it, you can make him get these "scalp of the sizings" from a local miller.

English Meet Problem

To point out the importance of vitamin B1 from a national viewpoint, Dr. Borsook states in his new book: "In July 1940, the English government decided to fortify white flour with crystalline thiamin in such quantities that the daily per capita intake of that vitamin will be increased by approximately 100 International units. This is a very significant decision for a number of reasons. For the first time in the history of the world, the government of a great country has recognized by law the necessity of supplying a vitamin as well as simply gross food for a whole population.

"Equally important is the recognition by a government that dietary improvement by the educational process is slow and haphazard. Thirdly, a government has embraced the principle of fortification of a staple foodstuff for a whole nation."

MENU
BREAKFAST: Orange or grapefruit juice, scalp of the sizings cereal, French toast, jam, coffee, milk.
LUNCHEON: Toasted cheese sandwiches, mixed vegetable salad, preserved peaches, tea, milk.
DINNER: Lamb chops, hash browned potatoes, buttered celery, lettuce and watercress salad, pudding with strawberry jam, coffee, milk.

been heard this year in public, their part in the program is being looked forward to with a great deal of interest.

The band, under the direction of Harold Rowe, will play several numbers in the concert which have been selected for the band and orchestra festival to be held in Klamath Falls March 25. These will include an overture picked for the all star band and the overture that the local band will play for its own number, as well as several solos and ensembles entered in the same event.
