

DOCTOR SLAIN AFTER TUSSELE WITH GUNMAN

trons, with the exception of Bragg, into the back room. Bragg pretended to be dazed and sat watching them without molestation.

Took Money

One gunman leaped a counter and opened one of the two cash registers in the place. He scooped out the money in cash and bills and put it in his pocket.

The other gunman went to the other cash register. He attempted to operate the $3 key, but it failed to open the money drawer. He gave it up and started out of the door with his companion.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Warren had run out of the back door of the building and fired a pistol several times to sound an alarm. Georgia Harris ran out a side door to go for help.

As the bandits left the front entrance, Dr. David followed them, with Miles Saunders close behind.

One bandit, carrying the pistol, turned to the right, while the shotgun bandit went to the left.

Short Scuffle

The man with the pistol encountered Mrs. Warren. There was a short scuffle, giving David time to catch up.

A blow from the chiropractor sent the bandit reeling, and he fled down the alley between the Buffalo lunch and the Elmsworth jewelry store.

David was close behind and caught up with the man at the rear of the building. They went down on the ground and in the ensuing scuffle, Saunders, who was aiding David, got hold of the bandit's gun. He attempted to use it, pulling on the trigger, but the safety was on and the gun did not discharge.

Warning Shouted

At that moment, the shotgun bandit came up from the other side of the building, standing outside a ragged picket fence and shouting a warning.

David rose from his position on top of the pistol bandit, and there was a roar as the shotgun discharged.

The blast struck David full in the chest, shattering his lungs. Saunders, standing close by, received birdshot in a knuckle and in his shoulder.

The bandit on the ground got to his feet and ran through a gate in the fence as the gathering crowd gave attention to the dying chiropractor.

David was carried inside the cafe and died in a few minutes.

Coat, Mask Found

The fleeing gunmen were believed to have gone down the alley towards Washburn way, but they probably first started to the front of the cafe on South Sixth street to get into a car that had been left standing with the engine running.

Officers found a bloody coat, bandanna handkerchief and a pair of old gloves behind a sign board on that side of the cafe. Evidently the bandits decided against attempting to make it to the waiting automobile through the crowd gathering in front.

The car had been stolen from a parking place in front of the Casino, a short distance away on South Sixth street. It belongs to John Huey Harger.

From the telephone in the Buffalo lunch excited telephone calls were made to officers, and city police, state police and sheriff's officers arrived within a few minutes.

As a quick check was made in the surrounding vicinity, the officers took statements from witnesses of the hold-up and shooting. They learned that the two men were roughly dressed, one wearing a brown coat (the coat found beside the cafe) and the other a tweed coat.

Messy Clues

No one in the place recognized any characteristics of the gunmen that would help in identification, but after a long check-up Sheriff Lloyd L. Low said he believed the men were from this vicinity and not "professionals" from outside.

The men were described as of medium build, although one appeared shorter than the average man. Hats and handkerchiefs well concealed their features.

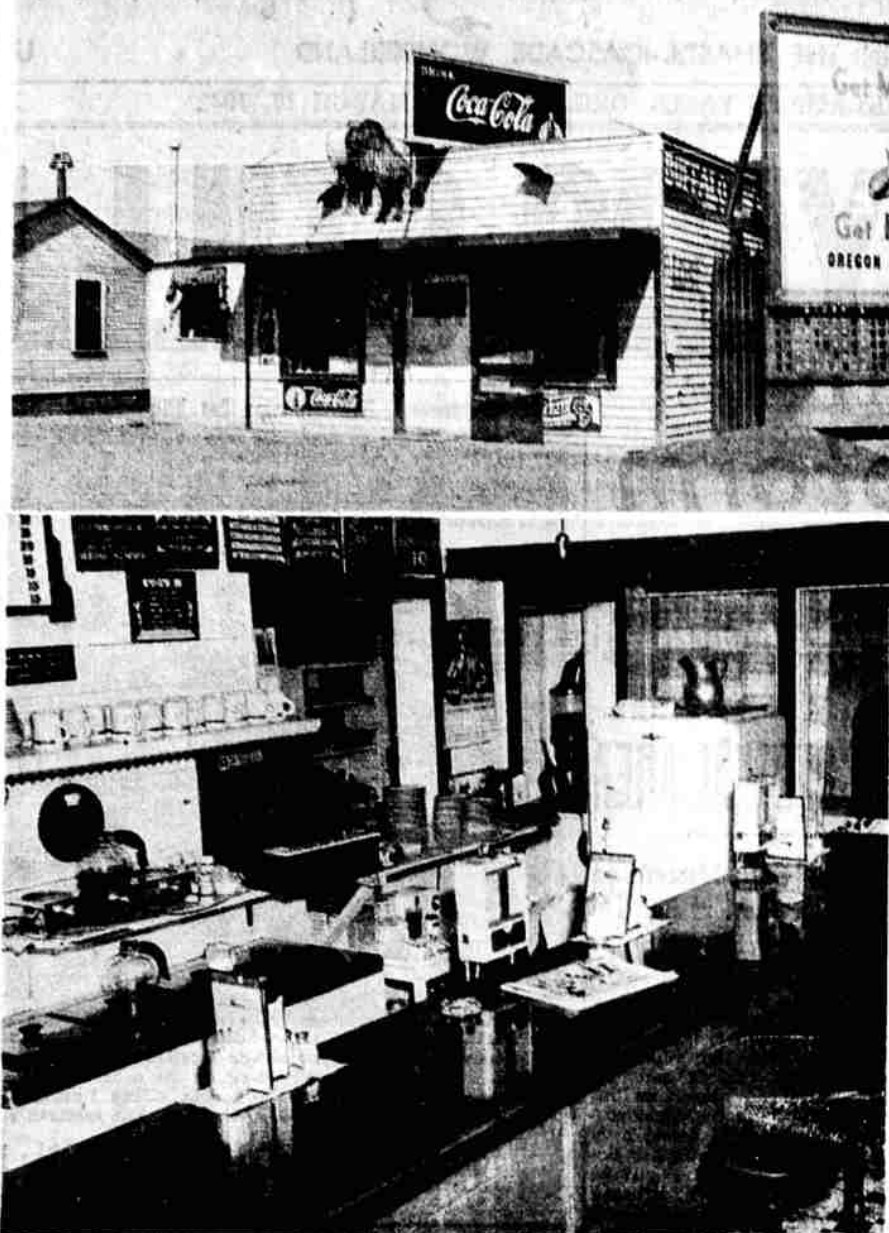

The officers said they were convinced the gunman who was scuffling with David had been hit with birdshot from his partner's gun. David was wearing a white shirt, which probably helped the gunman in picking out a target, but the wounds on the chiropractor indicated a wide pattern.

David's brother, Habib (Hap) David, owns the building in which the Buffalo lunch is located. Dr. David had an office nearby, where he practiced his profession, and on busy nights he sometimes waited bar at the lunch room.

Dr. David had been here since 1935. He was a native of Pierce county, N. D., and was single. Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander David of North Sacramento, Calif., and four sisters and four brothers.

The remains were moved to Whitlock's.

Where Holdup, Robbery and Murder Occurred

These are exterior and interior views of the Buffalo lunch, where Dr. S. A. David, chiropractor, was killed by bandits who had held up and robbed the place of $70. The cash register in the picture failed to work for one of the bandits, when the $3 key stuck. The other robber got a cash till open and scooped up the money.

pensions and vocational education.

In the dying hours the legislators, with frayed nerves, killed several measures, including bills to equalize power systems and peoples utility districts, and to restrict sale of fortified wines to liquor stores.

The senate, on the whole, was orderly, but the house was boisterous and many members lost their tempers, causing Speaker Robert S. Farrell Jr. to have trouble keeping order.

The 40-mill property tax limitation resolution, passed by the house, was buried in the senate assessment and taxation committee on the last day.

While the adjournment resolution says the legislature quit at 11:59 p. m. Saturday, because many members said it was illegal to meet on Sunday, the session actually didn't end until three hours later.

CABIN CRUISER IN RIVER OVERTURNS

Making a turn at "too high a speed" the 26-foot cabin cruiser of Edgar Thompson Sunday overturned in five feet of Williamson river water throwing Thompson, Mrs. Thompson and Frank Snyder, local automobile dealer, from the craft and damaging the motor.

According to Thompson, an employee of the Snyder Motor company, the accident occurred five miles upriver as the trio were making a pleasure cruise. All three were thrown into shallow water and only slightly bruised.

The three were able to right the boat but were unable to start the motor after the wetting.
